PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 80th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 3, 1947

The 3d day of January being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Eightieth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

Leslie L. Biffle, of Arkansas, the Secretary, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following

PRAYER

Lord of the nations and of the passing years, summoned as servants of the people, we come in a crucial and creative day. First of all, we would bow our hearts in reverential silence in Thy searching presence, unto whom all hearts are open and from whom no secrets are hid. With burning issues affecting the very life of this dear land of hope and freedom and touching, too, the weal of the whole world, waiting to command our every power, with the expectant eyes of a cloud of witnesses upon this Chamber gazing from the invisible galleries of the past and the present, in this hallowed moment at the very top of the clean, white page of these national deliberations, we would write, "In the beginning, God," conscious, in very truth, that until we find Thee and art found of Thee, we begin at no beginning and come to no ending.

Grant to Thy servants here, to whom a great trust is committed, faith that dissolves all corroding cynicism, courage that scorns all compromise of principle, toil that refuses anything lower than one's best, as, on this solemn day, by high values and noble ideals, the course of the Congress is set.

We ask it in the name and for the sake of Him in whose face the final truth and beauty burns to birth and who taught us when we pray to say—let us all join together in the Lord's Prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever.

Amen.

CREDENTIALS

The SECRETARY. The Chair will ask the clerk to read a statement.

The Chief Clerk (John C. Crockett) read as follows:

The present occupant of the chair, which he takes under direction of rule I, paragraph 2, lays before the Senate the credentials of the various Senators elected in November last for full and unexpired terms, including those of certain Senators elected and appointed for unexpired terms which ended at 12 o'clock noon today.

The above credentials, in most instances, follow the form suggested by the Senate in its resolution of January 4, 1934, and if there be no objection they will be placed on file and printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, I have no objection to the filing of the credentials, but I should like to make a motion.

The SECRETARY. If the Senator from Michigan will permit, the Chair will inquire if there is objection to the order which has been read.

There being no objection, the credentials of the respective Senators-elect were received, ordered to be placed on file, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November 1946 JOHN J. WILLIAMS was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Delaware a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of 6 years, beginning on the 3d day of January 1947.

Witness: His Excellency our Governor, Walter W. Bacon, and our seal hereto affixed at Dover, this 20th day of November in the year of our Lord, 1946.

WALTER W. BACON,
Governor.

By the Governor:
[SEAL] WILLIAM J. STOREY,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF OHIO,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Columbus, November 25, 1946.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November 1946 KINGSLEY A. TAFT was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Ohio a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term beginning on the 15th day of December 1946 and ending at noon on the 3d day of January 1947.

Witness: His Excellency our Governor, Frank J. Lausche, and our seal hereto affixed at Columbus, Ohio, this 25th day of November, in the year of our Lord, 1946.

FRANK J. LAUSCHE,
Governor.

By the Governor:
[SEAL] EDWARD J. HUMMEL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, I wish to point out for the record that the service of KINGSLEY TAFT as Senator began on November 6, 1946, the day after his election. The portion of his credentials indicating that his unexpired term began on December 15, 1946, should be disregarded. It was apparently inserted because of a misapprehension as to the authority of the Ohio Legislature, by the enactment of Ohio General Code, section 4828–3, in 1914, to empower the Governor to make a temporary appointment to be effective beyond the date when the people filled the vacancy by election as the legislature directed. Under the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the Ohio Legislature clearly had no such authority. This is also recognized in the Federal statutes (2 United States Code, section 36; 49 Statutes 22). The declarations of candidacy, the petitions of candidates, the primary ballots, the certificates of nomination, and the election ballots referred to the office to which Senator KINGSLEY TAFT was elected as "United States Senator (unexpired term)." There was nothing in or on any of them to indicate that the term began on any particular date.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

Mr. FERGUSON obtained the floor.

The SECRETARY. Will the Senator from Michigan permit the Chair to have another statement read?

Mr. FERGUSON. Certainly.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The rules of the Senate provide no order of business for the opening day of the first session of a Congress. However, under the practice which has been followed for a long period of years, the next order of business will be the administration of the oath of office to the various Senators-elect, in groups of four, called in alphabetical order.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, I object to that method of swearing in the Senators-elect, and I now move that the oath be administered to the able Senator-elect from Michigan, ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, whose credentials, in the usual form, have been received and filed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, if the Senator from Michigan will yield, may I ask him what purpose he has in departing from the traditional custom of the Senate?

Mr. FERGUSON. The purpose is to have Senator-elect ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG sworn in as the first Senator to take the oath at the beginning of the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. Secretary, I ask for order, and that the occupants of the galleries be requested to be quiet. It is difficult to hear what is said.

The SECRETARY. The occupants of the galleries will maintain order. It is difficult for Senators to hear what is going on on the floor when there is talking in the galleries.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, with all due respect to the able Senator from Michigan, I object.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Michigan has submitted a motion.

Mr. OVERTON. I thought he had asked unanimous consent. It was difficult for me to hear.

Mr. FERGUSON. I submitted a motion.

Mr. OVERTON. I inquire if the motion is debatable.

The SECRETARY. The motion is debatable.

Mr. OVERTON. Whenever the Senator from Michigan yields the floor I shall ask for recognition.

Mr. FERGUSON. I will yield to the Senator for a moment.

Mr. OVERTON. I say I am waiting until the Senator from Michigan yields the floor. I assume he wants to present his motion and the reasons for it.

Mr. FERGUSON. I have just stated the reason for the motion, which is that I desire Senator-elect ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, of Michigan, to be the first Member of the Senate to be sworn in at the beginning of this new Congress.

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Michigan yield the floor?

Mr. FERGUSON. The motion is before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. OVERTON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Does the Senator from Michigan still retain the floor?

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the minority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. There seems to be some confusion, naturally so, among Senators, and to a greater extent among the public generally with respect to the method of swearing in Senators. From time immemorial it has been customary to call Senators-elect in alphabetical order in groups of four, but there is no rule on the subject; it has been a custom only. I recall a few years ago when Vice President Dawes required all 32 new Senators to stand up in a body and to be sworn at one time. He did it, I suppose, by unanimous consent or by order of the Chair in the absence of a rule.

Under the circumstances, the Senate has the parliamentary right to adopt any method that it may see fit in determining the order in which Senators shall be sworn in, and, in the absence of a rule, any Senator who is recognized can move that any Senator-elect be sworn in regardless of where his name would appear on the list. Therefore, the motion of the Senator from Michigan is in order, and, in the absence of a rule, and in spite of the custom which has prevailed merely by unanimous consent, any other Senator can arise and, if he is recognized, move that any Senator-elect be sworn in.

I felt that explanation ought to be made because we have proceeded from time immemorial by swearing in Senators-elect in groups of four in alphabetical order, but there is no rule on the subject in the Senate rules, and there is no rule which would prevent us from adopting any other method which we might see fit to adopt as to the order in which Senators-elect might be sworn in.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, I have made objection to swearing in Senators in groups of four in alphabetical order. I have no particular desire at the present moment to press the matter of swearing in the able Senator-elect from Michigan, except that I think in the administration of the oath the Senate should in each case adopt the same method, and that it should be on motion.

So I enter my objection to the swearing in of the new Senators in groups of four, and I withdraw the motion to swear in Senator-elect ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG at this moment, in order that we may ascertain whether we cannot adopt a method of swearing in the respective Senators.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Secretary, I present to the Senate the name of JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, recently elected Senator from the State of Wisconsin, and move that he be sworn in.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. WILEY. I withhold it.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry. If the order of recognition is left to the discretion of the Chair, will he recognize the sponsors of the various Senators in the alphabetical order of the names of the Senators-elect? If so, it is unnecessary that any other method be adopted.

The SECRETARY. If it is left to the discretion of the Chair, the Chair will ask the clerk to call the names of the Senators-elect in alphabetical order.

Mr. TAFT. Then the first name to be called will be that of the Senator-elect from Connecticut, Mr. BALDWIN, I take it.

The SECRETARY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is to say, they would be called one at a time, and not in groups?

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

The SECRETARY. One at a time. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his motion?

Mr. WILEY. In accordance with the statement of the present majority leader, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], as to the right of any Senator, since there is no rule on the subject, to present his new colleague and request that he be sworn in, I have made such a motion. I think we should proceed in that manner, the Chair having recognized me for that purpose.

However, following the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, I shall withdraw the motion, though I think it is the proper way to proceed, and the best way to reach results.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Secretary, I gather, then, that the ruling of the present Presiding Officer affects the incoming Senator from Connecticut. Do I understand the ruling of the Secretary to be to the effect that it will now be proper for the Senator from Connecticut to escort the Senator-elect from Connecticut to the desk for the purpose of having the oath administered to him?

The SECRETARY. The Chair will request the clerk to call the first name on the list of Senators-elect.

The Chief Clerk called the name of RAYMOND E. BALDWIN, of Connecticut, and Mr. BALDWIN, escorted by Mr. MCMAHON, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to him by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will call the second name on the list.

The Chief Clerk called the name of THEODORE G. BILBO, of Mississippi.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Secretary, I send to the desk a resolution, to which I wish to address myself.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. What is the question before the Senate? Is there a motion pending?

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Idaho has sent to the desk a resolution to be read.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, as soon as the resolution is read, I desire to object to its consideration at the present moment.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 1), as follows:

Whereas the Special Committee To Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946, has conducted an investigation into the senatorial election in Mississippi in 1946, which investigation indicates that THEODORE G. BILBO may be guilty of violating the Constitution of the United States, the statutes of the United States, and his oath of office as a Senator of the United States in that he is alleged to have conspired to prevent citizens of the United States from exercising their constitutional rights to participate in the said election; and that he is alleged to have committed violations of Public Law 252, Seventy-sixth Congress, commonly known as the Hatch Act; and

Whereas the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program has completed an inquiry into certain transactions between THEODORE G. BILBO and various war contractors and has found officially that the said BILBO, "in return for the aid he had given certain war contractors and others before Federal departments, solicited and received political contributions, accepted personal compensation, gifts, and services, and solicited and accepted substantial amounts of money for a personal charity administered solely by him" * * * and * * * "that by these transactions Senator BILBO misused his high office and violated certain Federal statutes"; and

Whereas the evidence adduced before the said committees indicates that the credentials for a seat in the Senate presented by the said THEODORE G. BILBO are tainted with fraud and corruption; and that the seating of the said BILBO would be contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuation of free Government and the preservation of our constitutional liberties: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the claim of the said THEODORE G. BILBO to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said THEODORE G. BILBO on the matters adduced before the Special Committee To Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946, and the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program and to take such further evidence as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate at the earliest possible date; that until the coming in of the report of said committee, and until the final action of the Senate thereon, the said THEODORE G. BILBO be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. FERGUSON. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Michigan will state his inquiry.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is there a motion pending before the Senate to swear in Senator-elect BILBO? As I understand rule VI, it would require a motion, and such a motion would be the first question to be considered.

The SECRETARY. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho bears upon the seating or the credentials of the Senator-elect from Mississippi.

Mr. FERGUSON. My parliamentary inquiry is, Is there pending at the present time a motion to take up the credentials and to swear in Senator BILBO?

The SECRETARY. No motion is pending. The resolution of the Senator from Idaho is pending.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is the resolution presented by the Senator from Idaho in order?

The SECRETARY. The Chair will ask the clerk to read rule VI.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE VI

PRESENTATION OF CREDENTIALS

1. The presentation of the credentials of Senators-elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correction of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. OVERTON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Am I correct in understanding that the credentials of Senator BILBO have been presented?

The SECRETARY. They were presented and filed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to propound another parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Does the pending resolution take precedence over the swearing in of Senator BILBO?

The SECRETARY. The Chair must hold that under the rule it does. However, the resolution is subject to amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. A point of order.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I submit that we cannot hear any of the colloquy now being engaged in. Certainly the entire membership has the right to hear what is going on, and I respectfully ask that Senators raise their voices so that all the Members of the Senate may hear what is being said.

The SECRETARY. The point of order is well taken. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. FERGUSON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to discover what is before the Senate at the present time. I should like to know if it is the ruling of the Chair that the resolution of the Senator from Idaho is in order and is now before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Chair rules that the resolution is in order, and is subject to amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, I offer, as a substitute for the resolution, matter I send to the desk.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TAYLOR addressed the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. May I ask the Chair whether the Senator from Idaho has the floor, not having yielded to another Senator?

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Idaho has the floor. The Senator from Michigan propounded certain parliamentary inquiries.

Mr. BARKLEY. Making a parliamentary inquiry or asking a question is different from offering a substitute while the author of a pending resolution has the floor.

The SECRETARY. The Chair has not recognized the Senator from Michigan to offer a substitute.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Secretary, I wish to address myself to the resolution. I present it with a deep sense of its gravity and solemnity. While the Constitution gives to the Senate the power to pass upon the qualifications of its own Members, that power should be sparingly used. The people of each State have the right to choose their own representatives in Congress, and it would be extremely unwise for this body to set itself up as a self-righteous arbiter of the personality, the politics, or the morals of men who have been duly elected to office. I did not embark upon this course lightly but only after many weeks of deliberation and reflection. But it now appears that in rejecting Mr. BILBO we are merely rejecting a candidate until his election is proved to be the fair expression of the free will of those people.

I have frequently disagreed with the views of Mr. BILBO on the floor of this body and for that reason I have been doubly hesitant about taking this step. We do not have the right to reject any man because of his political views. That would be the negation of democracy.

If the people of Mississippi or any other State wish to elect to the Senate a man who advocates any belief extreme to the point of outraging great numbers of our citizens, that is their own business. They are perfectly free to do so and their representative is free to express their views in the Senate. In a Chamber devoted to free discussion, we can claim no right to censor the views of our colleagues. In a democracy based on the belief in the citizen's ability to govern himself, no legislative body may question the will of the electorate freely and fairly expressed. But intimidation and violence cannot masquerade as free speech; indeed they destroy the freedom of the electorate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, I make the point of order that the Senate is not in order. We cannot hear what is going on.

The SECRETARY. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point of order applies to the occupants of the galleries as well as to the Senate itself.

The SECRETARY. The Chair will ask the Sergeant at Arms to circulate about in the Chamber and to direct the doorkeepers to keep order. By reason of conversations which are going on it is difficult to hear the speaker.

The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Secretary, on July 26, 1946, I called to the attention of the Senate the inflammatory nature of the speeches which were being made in the Mississippi primary campaign by Senator BILBO. I read into the RECORD a United Press report which appeared in the New York Times of Sunday, June 23, which reported that Senator BILBO had incited people in his State to use "any means" to prevent qualified voters from exercising their right to vote for candidates for the United States Senate. I urged immediate investigation since the elections at that time were only 2 weeks off. I pointed out that it was our duty to see "that no citizens will be deprived of their rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States." I further stated, "it therefore behooves us jealously to protect our democratic institutions, and to see that full observance is given everywhere to our precious constitutional guaranties, many of which were enacted for the specific purpose of preventing racial discrimination at elections."

On July 1, 1946, I appeared by invitation before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and presented a brief citing the relevant provisions of the Constitution and statutes of the United States, and suggesting Senate action to prevent their violation in Mississippi. I urged the committee to conduct immediate field investigations in the State of Mississippi to collect evidence while it was still fresh. The committee referred my request to the Committee on Campaign Expenditures, which has since conducted field hearings, and has prepared two reports.

I am confident that all my colleagues are by this time informed of the nature of the charges against Mr. BILBO. It is reasonable to assume they have followed closely the press reports of the committee hearings. I am sure that they are familiar with the findings of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, 1946, and the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

I am sure, too, that they are fully aware of the great interest which the country has shown in this case. Throughout the country citizens are watching today to see what action the Senate will take in this pressing matter.

Mr. Secretary, I do not exaggerate when I say that at this moment the honor and prestige of the Senate hang in the balance. To millions of Americans who have not previously evinced an interest in politics, today's action will alone determine whether this body is worthy of respect as the highest legislative body of a free people, or whether this body will fall into disrespect.

During the last few weeks I have driven through the Northwest, down the Pacific coast to Mexico, and across the country to Washington. Not once during that long auto tour have I been able to pick up a newspaper whose editorial page has not underlined these facts. I have not seen a magazine of current affairs which has not discussed the problem and expressed concern as to whether the Senate would have the courage to face this issue squarely. I have not heard a speaker of national reputation who has not speculated upon whether the code of the cloakroom would prove to be a higher law than the Constitution of the United States.

In short, Mr. Secretary, today it is not only Mr. BILBO who is on trial. Today it is the Senate itself which is on trial.

We, the Members of the Senate, are not only on trial collectively, we are on trial individually. For a statement was recently issued to the press asserting that if Mr. BILBO were refused his seat, he would expose the foibles of other Members of the Senate.

Mr. Secretary, I for one do not fear that threat of retaliation. The sound of the rattling skeleton in the closet does not intimidate me. I am sure that it does not intimidate my colleagues.

Our duty is made all the more plain because we were served with advance warning of Mr. BILBO's intention to subvert the electoral process. If we are to lend credence to reports appearing in the press at the time, he repeatedly declared his intent to keep qualified voters away from the polls. Repeatedly we read of it in the newspapers. As far back as July 1, 1946, I warned the Committee on Privileges and Elections as follows:

> If we cynically ignore the performance which the newspapers are now reporting, the prestige of this body will suffer a serious blow. The American people in every city in the country are reading these reports in the newspapers. They are observing that the United States Senate is completely unruffled and unperturbed. If we fail to take notice of these incidents without even raising an eyebrow we will lose the respect of men who love freedom. A great many of us have realized, albeit dimly, that various practices have been resorted to in some States to prevent citizens from voting. We have looked away from the fact that the Constitution and laws have become a dead letter in many places. In the press of our daily affairs we have ignored the mess but it is hard to ignore it any longer. We must take some action to protect our own integrity. We must take action to assure that every qualified citizen and voter will be permitted to cast his ballot for Federal officials in Mississippi next week and in every other State in the country. I ask your committee to give full force to the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

In that same speech I went on to say further:

> Gentlemen, this issue is one which, in the minds of millions of our citizens, tests the sincerity of our Senate. It is as important to the future of our Republic as any problem which has come before us this session. We cannot duck it, we cannot avoid it. It is before us. It was put before us, if the newspaper reports are correct, by one of our own Members, who saw fit to give us advance notice of a widespread plan to break Federal laws. He has allegedly named the time and place and pretty well described the details of the crimes to be committed. The threats are worthy of special credence because they were made in the context of a long history of similar crime. The election is tomorrow. If you act, you must act fast.

This ends my quotation from the speech I delivered on July 1, 1946.

Senators, the election day is now past. From the evidence so far made available it would appear that the crimes I then anticipated have now been perpetrated. While I decried the lack of vigorous action prior to the election, the fact that such action was not then taken only makes it more imperative that we act on the matter now.

While pondering the course of action I would take in this case, I read the debates of the Senate in the Vare and Smith cases. In reading the Smith debates which took place almost two decades ago, I was particularly impressed with the brilliant, statesmanlike and thoughtful words of the able constitutional lawyer who is now the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

At the time, the proponents of the candidate Smith tried to threaten the able and courageous Senators from the South with the possibility of retaliation if they voted against his seating. The able Senator replied in words which are worth repeating, because I feel that they still represent the sentiment of the best minds of the South. I quote:

> The doctrine has here been invoked that, perchance some Southern States have discriminated in their primary or election laws against a certain class of our citizens, that in some way we on this side of the aisle are estopped, especially those of us from the Southern States, to raise any question touching the qualification, election, or returns of any man who comes here from any State.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Secretary, I wish to raise a point of order.

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Idaho yield for that purpose?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield for a point of order.

Mr. MORSE. I invite attention to rule XXXIII of the Senate:

> No person shall be admitted to the floor of the Senate while in session, except as follows:

Then there are listed the permissions for admission to the floor of the Senate. The last paragraph of the rule reads as follows:

> Clerks to Senate committees and clerks to Senators when in the actual discharge of their official duties. Clerks to Senators, to be admitted to the floor, must be regularly appointed and borne upon the rolls of the Secretary of the Senate as such.

I point out that on this occasion I feel that the floor of the Senate has been turned into an auditorium. Many people have been seated on the floor of the Senate who have no right here under the rules of the Senate. I think it is an unfortunate precedent, and I think the Sergeant at Arms should be instructed to see that rule XXXIII is carried out to its fullest letter. The deliberations of this body in this solemn hour are of such great concern to the Nation that I do not think the work of individual Senators should be impaired by having on the floor individuals not connected with the work of the Senate, who are obviously, by conversation which is being carried on, making it impossible for us even to hear the Senator from Idaho, whose voice usually can be heard throughout the Chamber.

The SECRETARY. The point of order is sustained; and those who do not come within the provisions of the rule will please leave the Senate Chamber.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. There was so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not hear the statement of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Secretary, I made the point of order in regard to the duty of the Sergeant at Arms to exclude from the Senate floor under rule XXXIII persons who are not entitled to be on the floor at this time. It is not the intention of the junior Senator from Oregon to make it impossible, as has been suggested to me, for the wives of the new Senators to see them sworn in. However, I think it is the clear duty of the Sergeant at Arms to see to it that the wives and relatives of the new Senators be given preferential seating in the family gallery of the Senate. I submit that if we start breaking down the precedents under rule XXXIII as is being done today, there will be no end to the confusion which will result in the future from this infringement upon the proper decorum of the Senate. The responsibility for protecting the rights of the Senate rests with the Sergeant at Arms once he is instructed to enforce any rule such as rule XXXIII. The rule was intended to protect the Senate from just the sort of confusion that prevails on the floor of the Senate at this very moment. Thus under a point of order I request that rule XXXIII be enforced.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, will the Chair have read the rule in question?

The SECRETARY. The clerk will read the rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was about to suggest that.

The legislative clerk (Emery L. Frazier) read as follows:

> No person shall be admitted to the floor of the Senate while in session, except as follows:
> Clerks to Senate committees and clerks to Senators when in the actual discharge of their official duties. Clerks to Senators, to be admitted to the floor, must be regularly appointed and borne upon the rolls of the Secretary of the Senate as such.

The SECRETARY. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

The Senator from Idaho may proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Secretary, I was quoting from a speech delivered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I continue:

> I have no desire to get into two controversies at once, but that argument has about as much logic in it, of common sense in it, and of fairness in it, as the argument frequently advanced that because one comes from the South where certain amendments are alleged to have been nullified, he is estopped from saying that other amendments shall not be nullified. In my place I say now that whenever any Southern State, my own included, goes beyond the limitations of the Constitution, any person at interest is invited to take an appeal through all of the courts to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the question.
> Why this effort to invoke this doctrine here? Why should Senators persist in the effort to frighten by threat the South every time they wish us to do wrong? Why do they not undertake to scare us when they wish us to do right?

Those were brave, intelligent, and courageous words. I quote still another passage, which is equally worthy of attention:

> More than that, I have not the slightest hesitancy in saying that when the time comes, as happily it will come, I believe, when every line of our law which seemingly gives offense to any right-thinking man or woman in this country may be written out of it, no section of this Nation will be happier than will the South itself.

Mr. Secretary, I believe that this statement of a great southern statesman, with whom I am proud to serve, represents the forward-looking attitude which characterizes the truly great men of the South. I am convinced that they will do their utmost according to their lights to try to effectuate the equality of man which the Declaration of Independence advocates and the Constitution demands. But I do not here argue for any improvement in that direction. That is not the issue here today. Today I do not argue in favor of a step forward; I argue against a step backward.

Let me detail briefly the evidence against Mr. BILBO. I shall consider first, because I believe it to be of first importance, the charge that Mr. BILBO conspired to and did prevent duly qualified citizens from voting because of their race or color, in direct violation of the Constitution.

The contemporary news reports amply illustrate the type of activity in which Mr. BILBO engaged. I concede that those newspaper reports were not made under oath. I regret very much that the Campaign Investigating Committee failed to call the newspaper reporters to the stand. The committee acted pursuant to a request from the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the news reports which I placed before it. It called Mr. BILBO to deny the reports, but did not call the reporters to confirm them. In the special investigation which I suggest, however, there will be ample opportunity to hear the reporters involved.

Meanwhile, I, for one, am inclined to give great weight to their reports. I do this partly because some of them are known to me as men of the highest credibility and accuracy; and I do so because of the striking unanimity of all of the reports.

Let me read some of the statements Mr. BILBO made:

This is from the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News of June 23, 1946:

> LAUREL.—Citizens of Mississippi were again called on here Saturday by Senator THEO. G. BILBO "to resort to any means" to keep Negroes from the polls in the July 2 Democratic primary.
> "And if you don't know what that means, you are just not up on persuasive measures," said Senator BILBO as he completed a week of stump speaking in south Mississippi.

From the Jackson Daily News of May 30, 1946:

> TYLERTOWN.—Senator THEO. G. BILBO speaking here Wednesday afternoon in the interest of his candidacy for reelection, challenged the "qualifications" of Negroes to participate in a white Democratic primary, and laid the blame for "threatening racial strife in Mississippi to so-called southern liberals and socialistic, communistic political gangsters now attempting to undermine the white man's rule in the South."
> Senator BILBO insisted that "the Negro is not sufficiently advanced to meet the constitutional requirements for voting in Mississippi and therefore not qualified to participate in a white Democratic primary."

The Jackson (Miss.) Daily News on May 28, 1946, reported:

> Senator BILBO, holding forth on the porch of the pavilion, placed the responsibility for maintaining white supremacy in the hands of county officials.
> "The poll tax," he said, "has nothing to do with the Negro not voting in the State; the real thorn in their imaginary crown—placed there by the Negro lovers of the North—is section 244 of the State's constitution, which provides that before anyone can register he must be able to read, or explain after it is read to him or her, the provisions of this constitution.
> "The circuit clerks," he continued, "are under oath to protect the provisions of that constitution, and if there is a single man or woman serving in this important office who cannot think up questions enough to disqualify 'undesirables,' then write BILBO or any good lawyer and there are a hundred good questions which can be furnished."
> He told the campaign crowd it should support the officials and "use whatever means at your command to preserve and protect the custom in the Southern, white, Democratic primary."

Time magazine of July 1, 1946, contained this account:

> Three of his four opponents * * * were campaigning hard. But BILBO paid no heed. Instead he howled a warning, "The white people of Mississippi are sitting on a volcano. * * * We are faced with a Nation-wide campaign to integrate the nigger with the social life of this country. * * *
> "Congresswoman Clare Boothe Luce is the greatest nigger-lover in the North—except Old Lady Eleanor Roosevelt. Yep; Old Lady Roosevelt is worse. * * * In Washington she forced our southern girls to use the stools and the toilets of damn syphilitic nigger women. * * *
> "I call on every red-blooded white man to use any means to keep the niggers away from the polls. If you don't understand what that means, you are just plain dumb."

An article by Harry Henderson and Sam Shaw in Collier's, July 6, 1946, quotes Mr. BILBO, as follows:

> The poll tax won't keep 'em from voting. What keeps 'em from voting is section 244 of the constitution of 1890 that Senator GEORGE wrote. It says that a man to register must be able to read and explain the constitution or explain the constitution when read to him. * * * And then Senator GEORGE wrote a constitution that damn few white men and no niggers at all can explain. * * *
> Why, the niggers are having meetings all over the State. We don't know what they're up to. They've had meetings in every county—meetings behind locked doors. Two policemen up at Jackson broke in on one of their meetings and do you know what they found? Northern niggers teaching them how to register and how to vote. * * *
> Mississippi is white. We got the right to keep it that way, and I care not what Tom Clark and Hugo Black say. * * * I'm calling on every red-blooded American who believes in the superiority and integrity of the white race to get out and see that no nigger votes. * * * And the best time to do it is the night before.

A United Press dispatch by Martha Coble, June 25, 1946, reads as follows:

> JACKSON, MISS.—Senator THEODORE G. BILBO today challenged the right of the Federal Government to tell Mississippi it must allow Negroes to vote in next Tuesday's Democratic primary.

Mr. Secretary, the unanimity of these press reports and the character of the reporters is not the only warranty of their authenticity. There is another very persuasive factor. That is the undeniable fact that these statements kept appearing, day after day, in the newspapers of Mississippi, and never once were denied or repudiated by Mr. BILBO. Indeed, I would be willing to go so far as to say that failure to deny, repudiate, correct, or attempt to rectify these reports would, under the circumstances, constitute a virtual adoption of the language quoted.

In a political campaign it is inconceivable—absolutely inconceivable—that these press reports did not come to Mr. BILBO's attention. He knew that they were appearing everywhere, and he knew that among certain elements of the electorate he was profiting by their appearance. He knew, too, that the mere appearance of these statements in the newspapers would of itself intimidate thousands of other qualified voters, and would incite thousands of hoodlums. In order to prevent this it was clearly his duty to issue a denial if the statements were not true.

Did he issue a denial? Throughout the campaign he failed to do so. Indeed, he made no attempt whatever to deny the statements, until he appeared before a Senate investigating committee with his lawyer at his side. At late as August 3, 1946, he confirmed these news reports. In an interview on the Mutual Broadcasting System that night he participated in the following dialog:

Question. If you don't believe in lynch law, I wish you would explain in very simple terms to all of us what you meant by the statement that was several times attributed to you as having been made in campaign speeches down there, that the way to stop Negroes from voting was to start from the night before.

BILBO. I said the best time to keep a nigger away from a white primary in Mississippi was to see him the night before.

Question. Wasn't that in effect to intimidate any Negroes who might have differed with your interpretation of the law and to keep them from the polls?

BILBO. You can call it what you may.

Mr. Secretary, I respectfully submit that that radio confirmation far outweighs the self-serving last-minute denials that were issued to a committee of this Senate on advice of counsel.

In his defense, Mr. BILBO has stated that even if he left the word out his hearers always understood that he referred only to "legal" means. He also claims that he was misquoted and that he did in fact use the word "legal." The committee did not call the newspapermen who unanimously omitted the word "legal" from their quotations.

Mr. Secretary, let us examine the context of this language; let us consider the background of these speeches. Mr. BILBO has had a long history of exploiting racial antipathies. Race hatred has always been the favorite theme of his repertoire, and we here in the Senate have often listened to his peculiar anthropological theories. They have been appeals to the instincts of clash and conflict, appeals to the childlike distrust that men of one complexion have for those of another. Invariably, they were couched in a language of violence; and if these were his accents on the Senate floor, what can we assume to have been his speech upon the hustings?

When Mr. BILBO exhorted his followers to "use every means" to prevent Negroes from voting, he was not talking in a climate of calm, dispassionate deliberation. He spoke in an atmosphere redolent of the odors of hate, of burning flesh, of tar, of feathers, and of gunpowder. It was not the place for polite inferences or for thoughts that could remain pure and innocent in spite of the inflammatory language in which they were expressed. It was not a forum of academic discussion. The mere addition of one word would hardly change the purport of his harangue.

Is the white robe and hood the uniform of a debating society? Is it the costume of a discussion group? Or is it the mask of the Ku Klux Klan, a secret organization which has committed more crimes under cover of darkness than any other organization in the Nation's history, an organization which from its inception has been dedicated to the oppression of Negroes, to an attempt to reduce them to the status of animals, to the denial of their franchise by beatings, bloodshed, torture, mayhem, threats, coercion, and murder?

Mr. BILBO has taken the solemn midnight pledge of membership in this organization. He has signed his name in blood to its tenets. In a recent radio speech, he admitted membership in the Ku Klux Klan. I quote him:

I am a member of the Ku Klux Klan No. 40, called Bilbo, Bilbo Klan No. 40, Poplarville, Miss.

He said that he regarded his oath so conscientiously that "once a klansman, always a klansman."

All of these facts were known to the people of Mississippi. They knew BILBO to be a Klan member, and they knew that he was sympathetic to the aims and purposes of that organization. When he rose to emotional heights in demanding the exclusion of Negroes from the polling places, were they likely, then, to infer that he was referring, of course, only to "legal" methods? Would they be likely to take him seriously if he sandwiched in the word "legal"?

It is also argued in defense of Mr. BILBO that Negroes never were permitted to vote in the State of Mississippi. This, of course, is pure fiction. Negroes have not only voted in the State of Mississippi; they have even represented that State in this honored Chamber. In the post-reconstruction repression the vote was illegally taken away from Negro citizens.

The fact that the Senate might have previously ignored some violations of law does not excuse Mr. BILBO. No amount of acquiescence by this body can change a provision of the Constitution. No amount of acquiescence can wither the great fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to our Constitution. No amount of indifference can expunge the statutes which protect the civil rights of all our people. The dust of connivance can obscure, but it cannot tarnish, the bright gold of our free institutions.

But I do not now propose to brush that dust away. To my shame, I do not propose to vindicate these great constitutional provisions. I do not propose that this body should upon its own motion embark on a series of inquiries into elections held in all States, to determine whether the constitutional mandates are being observed.

In the Mississippi situation it was not I who brought the flagrant violations of law to public attention. It was Mr. BILBO who himself called our attention to these excesses.

For many years we have all known that there was a mess in our back yard. We knew that a stench was arising from the decadent, corrupt, and unlawful practices which were conducted at Federal elections in many States. We knew it; but in our smug and self-contented way we preferred to ignore it, for it is not pleasant to probe around in the muck. But it remained for Mr. BILBO to force us to see it and smell it; it remained for Mr. BILBO to rub our noses in it.

In the not distant past the Senate has debarred candidates for spending excessive sums of money on their campaigns. In the judgment of the Senate in the Newberry, Smith, and Vare cases, the expenditure of huge sums in effect resulted in coercion—it limited the free choice of voters. But if the expenditure of money limits the free choice of voters how much more is their choice limited by a threat to "see them the night before," to "use every means," yes; even "every lawful means" to keep them from voting, particularly when such incitements are addressed exclusively to "red-blooded" individuals?

The evidence brought before us by the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program goes back much further than the recent election campaign. The Senate has now been informed by this committee that Mr. BILBO solicited campaign funds from war contractors whom he had aided, in what the committee says was a clear violation of the law of the land.

The Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program uses this language in summing up BILBO's acts in the 1942 Democratic primary in Mississippi and since:

The evidence presented to this committee clearly indicates that Senator BILBO improperly used his high office as United States Senator for his personal gain in his dealings with war contractors.

It is immaterial that many of the acts detailed by the war investigating committee were committed prior to the recent election.

These acts alone, connected with the senatorial primary campaign of Wall Doxey in Mississippi in 1942 would render Mr. BILBO morally unfit to be a United States Senator. They would show that he was morally unfit to be a United States Senator in the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses. The disqualifying character of these alleged acts is in no way condoned merely because they were not known to the Senate at an earlier date.

The evidence of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program does not conclude with the Mississippi Democratic primary 4 years ago. Rather there is evidence submitted that he has continued such practices.

Of these continuing acts the committee itself has this to say:

The committee considers Senator BILBO's acceptance of expensive gifts and donations of personal property and the acceptance of improvements to real estate, provided by contractors who have profited out of their work for the Government in the war effort, to be an illegal practice in violation of existing Federal statutes.

There is no qualification in that statement which is the studied conclusion of a committee of the Senate. Let me repeat, the committee says flatly that Mr.

BILBO's actions are "an illegal practice in violation of existing Federal statutes."

These findings are a solemn indictment. They are not the ill-considered nor hastily trumped-up allegations of irresponsible persons. They are a judgment against Mr. BILBO by a committee of United States Senators, members of a group which we like to call the greatest deliberative body in the world. Our action in the handling of this case will determine whether that title is a misnomer.

That is why it is not enough for us to say, "Yes, this BILBO matter needs looking into some time—but later." We cannot say, "We will not bother with this trivia now when the Congress is busy organizing itself." We cannot say, "We will give BILBO his seat now and one of these days we will get around to deciding whether we will keep him."

I suggest that the Committee on Rules and Administration be directed to weigh all the evidence, as the Senate itself must do, from the specific viewpoint of deciding whether or not Mr. BILBO is entitled to be seated. I do this because the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program was interested primarily in determining the effect of Mr. BILBO's alleged actions upon the war effort. Mr. BILBO should be given a full and fair hearing on the direct question of his right to hold office. That is why I ask for this additional committee action. But in no case—in the face of the evidence already before the Senate—should Mr. BILBO be seated as a Senator pending the outcome of this additional hearing.

What are the powers and duties of the Senate in the matter of determining the qualifications of its Members? The specific language of the Constitution, the intent of the founding fathers, the interpretations of Senate and constitutional law authorities, and the numerous precedents are all clear and convincing to the effect that the Senate has an unlimited power to judge the qualifications of its own Members.

Section 5, article I, provides:

> Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

Section 3 provides that no person shall be a representative unless he meets certain age, citizenship, and residential requirements. The language of section 3 is in the negative. The requirements of section 3 are not qualifications; they are disqualifications. In the Constitutional Convention, there was an attempt to set up affirmative qualifications. During the debate on that draft, which was later rejected, Mr. Dickinson, of Delaware, opposed the formulation because it would be held to be exclusive. He stated that he was "against any recitals of qualifications in the Constitution. It was impossible to make a complete one, and a partial one would, by implication, tie up the hands of the Legislature from supplying omissions."

Mr. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, took the same view, saying: "Besides, a partial enumeration of cases will disable the Legislature from disqualifying odious and dangerous characters."

The intention of the founding fathers was clear. As expressed in the debates in the Constitutional Convention, and confirmed by the practices of the colonial legislatures and the acts of the first sessions of Congress, that intention was to give the Senate an untrammeled power to be the judge of the elections and qualifications of its own Members.

It has been contended from time to time that a Senator or Member of the other House is a representative of his State—a sort of ambassador to represent the State in the Legislature of the Union—and that if the credentials from his State are in good and proper form, they must be accepted. It may be said, first of all, that even ambassadors plenipotentiary are frequently rejected for being persona non grata. But fundamentally the ambassador argument is fallacious. A Senator is a national officer, a Senator of the United States, and not of his State. Judge Story, in his great work on the Constitution, says:

> They [the States] have just as much right, and no more, to prescribe new qualifications for a representative as they have for a President. Each is an officer of the Union, deriving his powers and qualifications from the Constitution, and neither created by, dependent upon, nor controllable by the States.
> These officers owe their existence and functions to the united voice of the whole, not a portion of the people.

Under this broad grant of power to judge elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members, what are the duties of the Senate?

It must be emphasized that Senators are officials of the United States Government and not of the States. They legislate not for the States alone but for all the people of the Union. The vote of a Senator affects every State in the Union as much as it does the State from which he is elected. His vote may mean peace or war, prosperity or depression, honest Government or public corruption, freedom or tyranny. Must the whole country suffer from the corruption of a part? Should not the United States protect itself against corruption in one of its parts?

In defense of its own integrity and the national welfare, what is the duty of the Senate under its power to judge elections? I say, and Senate history has many times confirmed it, that the Senate must insist that its Members be elected in full, fair, and free elections—in elections untainted by fraud or corruption or intimidation, whether perpetrated by money bribes or threats of physical violence. The Senate has many times declared that excessive campaign expenditures are grounds for disqualification. Why? Because excessive use of money holds the possibility, holds the threat and danger that the free choice of the voters may be impaired. How much more necessary, therefore, is it for the Senate to act against one who, by clear and damning evidence has been guilty not merely of the possibility of impairing a free choice by the citizenry but of actually and deliberately conspiring to prevent by force and violence the exercise of the constitutional right to vote.

How much more necessary therefore that the Senate protect itself against such a one when the evidence also shows that he has misused his high office and been guilty of a number of violations of Federal statutes, which are directed toward the protection of the electoral process and clean government.

It has been urged on occasion that the Senate should leave to the courts punishment for statutory crimes; that the proper procedure is to permit a Senator-elect to be seated and thereafter move to expel him. But Senate power is not so feeble, and Senate duty not so dilatory.

In my research into election contests, I found that the Senate has 29 times accepted the credentials of a Senator-elect and investigated the charges afterward; but 18 times the Senate has refused to seat the Senator-elect while the prima facie case was being investigated. The right of the Senate is clear—it may seat before investigating or investigate before seating. In this case, where a senatorial investigating committee has declared there is proof of corruption and disqualification, seating must be denied. The oath must not be administered to one who has deliberately and flagrantly flouted and mocked it.

I submit, Mr. Secretary, that that is more than the honor of this body can bear. It is now our clear duty to face the situation. It is our duty to say to Mr. BILBO: "If you have made public profession of your contempt for the Constitution, if you have boasted that the election laws are to be flagrantly violated in your State, if you have advised us publicly and frequently that you will subvert our democratic institutions, we can no longer ignore your actions. We must face the facts and perform our duty, distasteful as it may be. We must deny you a seat in this body."

In encouraging large numbers of people flagrantly to violate the law, BILBO violated his own oath to protect and defend the Constitution, the oath which he seeks to renew here today. What a mockery it would be if we should again permit him to perjure himself by swearing to support the Constitution which he has so openly conspired to violate. What a hypocritical and blasphemous gesture we would witness today, if Mr. BILBO were to stand in our midst and place his hand on the Holy Bible and swear fealty to democratic institutions, to free elections, to the rights of citizens. Or would Mr. BILBO prefer to save us that spectacle? Would he prefer to take his oath upon an expurgated version of the United States Constitution, one that did not say "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude"?

Mr. Secretary, I have frequently been informed that the problem of race relations in the South is a highly complex one, which required patience and good will. I am willing to accept that advice. I am willing to move as slowly as necessary.

I ask only one thing: That we do move forward; that we do not turn back the clock. And I will vigorously resist any attempt to move in the opposite direction, the direction of ill will.

Mr. BILBO has moved in that backward direction. He has toured the length and breadth of his State stirring up racial hatred, inciting white to hate black and causing black to hate white. To whites who are themselves poor, ill-nourished, ill-clothed, and ill-educated, he does not offer prosperity, nourishment, clothing, food, and education. No; he offers to them the delicious sense of feeling superior to someone else, the cheap thrill of membership in a master race, the joy of kicking someone else around.

To those on the lowest rung of the ladder he does not offer a lift; he merely offers to create another rung, still lower, so that the progress of man will be a series of descending steps. This is the same sort of cheap thrill that was peddled in Germany by an ambitious house painter some 10 years ago. We know that his doctrines and his methods brought no good to his people or the people of the world. We know that they never can, because they go directly counter to the teachings of brotherly love, which alone can save us all in this atomic age.

Mr. OVERTON obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary, a point of order.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to make the point of order that the Senate rules require the Chair to admonish the occupants of the galleries that the galleries will be cleared if they indulge in applause.

The SECRETARY. The point of order is well taken. The galleries will be in order. If there are further demonstrations, either of approval or disapproval, the Chair will be inclined to instruct the Sergeant at Arms to clear the galleries.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary——

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

The SECRETARY. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent because of a death in his family.

The SECRETARY. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] would have the effect of excluding Senator BILBO from the Senate. It would have the effect of excluding from a seat in the United States Senate one who comes here duly elected as a Senator by the people of his State, one who has presented his credentials showing his election, which credentials have been laid down by the Presiding Officer and ordered to be filed. There is no question as to Senator BILBO's nomination. There is no question as to his election. The only question involved in the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho is, Shall the Senate exclude from a seat in the United States Senate, at the very threshold of the Senate, one who comes accredited from a sovereign State as a duly elected Senator from the State of Mississippi?

The argument back of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho is that the Senator-elect from Mississippi is guilty of such gross misconduct, of acts involving such a degree of moral turpitude, and has so demeaned himself as to be unworthy of a seat in the United States Senate.

It is not my purpose to discuss that phase of the question. It is not my purpose to state now whether I consider Senator BILBO worthy of a seat in the United States Senate. I desire to present for the consideration of the Senate a much more fundamental question than that. I am not speaking for Senator BILBO. I am not speaking for any individual. I am speaking for the rights of American citizens regardless of what States they come from; I am speaking for the rights of sovereign States of the Union. I am speaking for the Constitution of the United States. I shall base my argument upon the Constitution of the United States. I shall take my stand, furthermore, upon what I consider to be a fair, decent, and just course for the United States Senate to pursue.

Charges are made by the Senator from Idaho, without any proof submitted by him beyond his own ipse dixit. There are charges pending before the Senate which were filed by a Senate investigating committee which had no jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of the election of the Senator from Mississippi. There are charges filed by the Senate special committee investigating the national-defense program which deal with events which occurred not in respect to Senator BILBO's election, but which occurred a number of years ago. The proper time to consider whether a Senator is entitled to a seat is when a duly constituted committee, organized for the purpose of making such an investigation, has made the investigation and submitted a report thereon. That committee used to be the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Now, under the law, it is the Committee on Rules. That committee has made no inquiry and has submitted no report.

Here was a committee which was constituted for the purpose of ascertaining whether there had been violations of the law with respect to war contracts, whether there had been misconduct on the part of war contractors, whether there had been any undue influence exerted upon those in charge of the War Department, the Navy Department, and other departments of the Government. The investigations were made for the purpose of protecting the Government against bribery and against corruption on the part of those designated to administer the law covering contracts dealing with the war.

There is another committee which has made a report, and this report is favorable to Senator BILBO. I say that the report of that committee is not one which should now be considered. It is not the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but it is a committee specially appointed with reference to expenditures in senatorial campaigns. While that report is favorable to the Senator-elect from Mississippi, at the same time it does not go, and it could not go, into the question of the validity of his election—into the question as to whether he is worthy of a seat in the United States Senate. The recommendations of that committee would be purely persuasive to the committee that has jurisdiction in such matters.

Now, here comes a man from a sovereign State of the Union, with his credentials, without there being any question as to their validity. He presents himself at the door of the Senate, and without any inquiry on the part of any regularly constituted committee of the Senate, under the Taylor resolution, he is to be barred from having a seat in the United States Senate.

My resolution, on the other hand, suggests that the Senator from Mississippi be allowed to take his seat and the oath be administered to him; that he be permitted to qualify without any prejudice to the right of the Senate to make inquiry either into the validity of his election or as to his fitness to occupy a seat in the United States Senate, and without any prejudice to the rights of the Senator-elect to appear in his own behalf in respect to any such matter.

Mr. Secretary, I should like to present this matter from a nonpartisan standpoint. It ought to be considered from a nonpartisan standpoint. I know it is said in the newspapers that the question is largely political. I hope it is not. I read a report contained in the daily press that the Republicans had met and had unanimously determined to bar Senator BILBO from a seat in the United States Senate. I hope that information is not correct. I hope that on reflection the members of the new majority party—and I say that with some regret [laughter]—will come to another and a better conclusion.

I have heard Senators on this floor, both on this and on the other side of the aisle, speak very vigorously in support of antilynching bills which they are in the habit of preparing every now and then, especially during an election year, just before the election. Now what are we trying to do here today? Without giving Mr. BILBO a trial before a regularly constituted committee, without giving him an opportunity to appear in his own behalf and defend his cause before this august body, we are undertaking to drag him by the heels to the door of the Senate and lynch him. That is the effect of the Taylor resolution.

That is not only unfair, it is unconstitutional. The Constitution declares that each House of Congress "shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members." The Constitution declares what the qualifications of a Senator are. They relate to age, residence, and citizenship. He must be 30 years of age. He must be an inhabitant of the State from which he is elected. He must have been a citizen of the United States for 9 years preceding his election. Those are the qualifications which are prescribed by the Constitution. When the Constitution authorizes the United States Senate to pass upon the qualifications of its Members those qualifications are the qualifications declared by the Constitution itself.

I think I could bring that thought more clearly to the attention of the Senate if I were to give an illustration. Suppose the framers of the Constitution, instead of making the Members of the United States Senate the sole judges of the qualifications of its Members, should have delegated that authority to some other tribunal. Suppose it had vested authority, let us say, in the Supreme Court, and that the Constitution, after declaring what the qualifications of a Senator are, with respect to age, residence, and citizenship, should have declared that the United States Supreme Court shall be the sole judge of the qualifications of Members of the United States Senate. Would any Senator say that the United States Supreme Court could add any other qualification than those prescribed by the Constitution? Certainly not. And if the United States Supreme Court may not add any qualifications, how can we, as Senators, add any other qualification? At the present moment we are not sitting here as legislators making laws for our Nation. We are sitting here as a great judicial tribunal, such as the United States Supreme Court is, or should be. We cannot go beyond the authority vested in this judicial tribunal, which is to pass upon the qualifications of a Member with respect to his age, residence, and citizenship. I think there can be no escape from that conclusion.

The Senate is not without its remedy. If the credentials of a Senator-elect are proper and he is sworn in, if he is one who, in the judgment of his colleagues, is unworthy of a seat in this body, the Senate has the remedy of expulsion, an adequate remedy.

The question whether or not a Senator has been duly elected is a question which I think the framers of the Constitution very wisely lodged in a majority vote of the Senate. The question whether a Senator has the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution as to age, residence, and citizenship is, I think, a question that was very wisely left by the framers of the Constitution to a majority vote of the Senate. But when it comes to blasting a man's reputation, when it comes to declaring him guilty of gross moral turpitude, when it comes to declaring him wholly unworthy of representing a sovereign State whose people have sent him here as their representative, I believe that the framers of the Constitution very well vested that authority in a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate instead of a mere majority. That is the protection which a Senator has. That is the protection that the State which sent him here has. If we depart from that sound philosophy on the part of the framers of our Government, then we shall be involved in a vast amount of trouble.

The right to expel a Senator is unlimited. There is no limitation in the Constitution, such as is prescribed with respect to his right to take a seat. The Senate has the unqualified and unlimited power of expelling a Senator. There is no limitation as to causes for which he may be expelled. He may be expelled because in his early growth he robbed a watermelon patch, or because, as has been said on the floor of the Senate in times past, he has red hair, or because Senators do not like the way he walks, or the brand of cigars he smokes. The authority of the Senate is wholly unlimited in respect to expulsion, but it is limited with respect to a Senator being allowed to take his seat in the United States Senate.

Mr. Secretary, this is not the first time I have taken that position. I took that position in the Langer case. Senator LANGER was elected from the State of North Dakota. There was no question as to his credentials. He was permitted—as I hope and expect Senator BILBO will be permitted—to take the oath without prejudice. Senator LANGER was a Republican. I have been a Democrat all my life, but I advocated that Senator LANGER be permitted to retain his seat unless the Senate should resort to the remedy of expulsion and by a two-thirds vote deny him a seat. I fought vigorously in that battle. As I said at the time, I was not fighting for Senator LANGER. I was fighting for the principles of the Constitution under which I live, and which I have sworn to support.

I know the temptations of partisan politics, and I know that often we succumb to them. I remember that when I first came here in 1931 there was a contested election in the House of Representatives between a Democrat and a Republican. A yea-and-nay vote was called for. Every Democrat voted for the Democrat, and every Republican voted for the Republican. Of course, there could not have been that unanimity on the part of one party, and contrary unanimity on the part of the other party, unless each had been actuated by political considerations. I hope we can be free from such considerations today.

Since that time we have fought another great war. The people of this country have become more united than ever. The two great parties have worked together during the 4 years of that strife, and we have succeeded. We did not display partisanship in the conduct of the war; and I hope we have emerged from it a more united people.

I hope there will not be in this Congress a decision of a question purely on political considerations. I remember that in the Langer case the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] made the identical argument which I have just made in support of the Constitution. If I can find what he said I should like to quote him, because the Senator from Ohio is justly recognized as a leader in the Republican Party, and what he said a few years ago on so grave a question should control him at the present hour. I believe that the Senator from Ohio is capable of rising to such an occasion as this. I do not believe that he, together with many other Senators on the other side of the aisle, as well as many on this side, will be actuated by considerations other than those which they have heretofore expressed as their just and sound convictions, and that they will not change their convictions overnight because the pending case involves a Democrat from Mississippi rather than a Republican from North Dakota.

This is what the Senator from Ohio said in the Langer case:

> If the kind of thing for which we are asked to exclude Senator LANGER is a matter for a proper cause for exclusion, then it should be decided by a majority vote. If it is a proper matter for expulsion only, I think the decision should be by a two-thirds vote. * * * In my opinion, the word "qualifications" as here used refers to the qualifications contained in the Constitution itself, and does not authorize the House—> to impose any qualifications it sees fit to impose.

I assume that means the Senate—

That was the declaration of the Senator from Ohio, an able lawyer and an able statesman. He declared that the qualifying provisions of the Constitution are controlling, and that we cannot consider any other.

I quote further from the Senator from Ohio:

> If the Senate can say that the absence of moral turpitude is a qualification, it can impose qualifications based on the morals, the religion or lack of religion, or the philosophical or political views of any person elected. This would be such a dangerous power that it certainly should not be implied unless entirely clear. The existence of such power would give to the majority of either House the ability to exclude those who disagreed with the opinions of the majority.

That is very clear; there is no doubt about that. Once we depart from the restrictive provisions of the Constitution, we have no limitations. Unhappily, in such event, a majority of the Senate can exclude any Senator-elect, either those who come to take their seats on the other side of the aisle or those who come to sit on this side of the aisle. If one of them can be excluded, all of them can be excluded—for any reason on earth, even for the reason that they are Democrats.

If the Senate does not submit to the control of the organic law of our Nation, handed down by our forefathers, the Senate is under no control whatsoever. How can we escape that conclusion? Without such control we can say, "I do not like BILBO because he advocates white supremacy, so keep him out," or "I do not like BILBO because he said that the best time to keep the Negro from voting is to see him the night before, so exclude him," or "I do not like BILBO because he has stood up here and has argued against antilynching bills and anti-poll-tax bills, so put him out." We can do all those things the moment we depart from the restrictive clauses of the Constitution of our country.

So I am agreeing with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. Not only do I agree with the Senator from Ohio, but I can refer to a number of other Senators, including the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. I digress for a moment to offer him my congratulations that he has been elected majority leader. I have always entertained for the Senator from Maine the highest regard. I have confidence in his judgment. I remember that in the course of the Langer debate, when I was arguing the matter, the Senator from Maine interrupted me during a colloquy and sustained my position, if my memory serves me correctly, as I think it does. I do not think the able senior Senator from Maine is overnight going to change those convictions, formed during almost a lifetime of service and studious labor for his country.

Continuing with what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said:

> Atheists, perhaps Communists, might be excluded today, Socialists tomorrow, and Republicans or Democrats in good time. It may be said that this is a fantastic possibility, but it is a possibility which was foreseen by the founders of the Constitution. * * * It is my belief that section 5, article I (of the Constitution), was only intended to make each House the final judge as to whether a man was properly elected and whether he met the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution itself.

Those are the qualifications as to age, residence, and citizenship.

My conclusion is that under the circumstances alleged in the present case, the Senate has power only to expel Mr. BILBO. It enjoys the unhampered right of expulsion; I do not question it for a moment. We have the absolute right to expel Mr. BILBO after he takes his seat, even 5 minutes after that time. We do not even have to give him a hearing, if we do not wish to do so. But I say that after he has been sent here by the people of his State we ought to give him a hearing by the committee properly constituted for that purpose. I have not read the report submitted by the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

I shall read no more. What the Senator from Ohio said is what many other Senators on the opposite side of the aisle said, and they voted that way.

Pursuing this thought further, I should like to read something which Mr. Madison said just during the adoption of the Constitution. I shall undertake to find it in the speech I made during the Langer case, and I am giving to the Bilbo case the same treatment that I gave to the Langer case. In the debates on the Constitution, Mr. Madison had this to say:

> The qualifications of elector and elected are fundamental articles in a republican form of government, and ought to be fixed by the Constitution.

He does not refer solely to the qualifications of electors, but he says, as well, "the qualifications of elected," and it is his view that both should be firmly entrenched in the Constitution.

> If the Legislature—

Said Mr. Madison—

> could regulate those of either—

And when he said "Legislature," he was referring to the National Legislature, the Congress of the United States—

> it can subvert the Constitution. A republic may be converted into an aristocracy or oligarchy as well by limiting the number capable of being elected as the number authorized to elect.

I wish to consider that thought expressed by Mr. Madison, and to say that it was followed by the framers of the Constitution. I hope the Senate will be patient with me for a moment. The point may be technical, but to my mind it is absolutely convincing. Clause 1 of section 3 of article I of the Constitution declares:

> The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof.

Of course, today they are selected by popular vote.

On the matter of the right of a State to send whom it pleases to the Senate, we find that a State, through its legislature, and now through its people, could, with this clause standing alone, send to the Senate a boy of 12 or a man from an insane asylum, or anyone it please, because it was an unlimited authority vested by the Constitution in the various legislatures of the States.

Article I, section 2, declares:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

In those two articles the framers of the Constitution prescribed the qualifications of the electors. When the Constitution was framed, the legislature alone could elect a Senator, and the electors of a congressional district could elect a Member of the House of Representatives when such electors had the qualifications of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. They were fixed. The qualifications of the electors were absolutely fixed, both as to United States Senators and as to Members of the House of Representatives. So the founders of the Constitution were careful to prescribe the qualifications of electors.

After that, there is in the Constitution the provision which declares that if vacancies occur, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointment until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy.

So there was another power of selection. There was the legislature; there were the qualified electors; and then in the case of temporary vacancies there was the power of the governor of the State to make a temporary appointment. There is no question as to the qualifications of the electors.

After prescribing the qualifications for electors as Madison said should be done, then the framers of the Constitution proceeded to impose qualifications on the elected. The qualifications are those I have already stated in reference to age, residence, and citizenship. So the work was done.

There was nothing left, then, to discretion. If a man is to be elected to the United States Senate he has to be selected by the qualified electors as prescribed by the amended Constitution, and if he is to take his seat in the United States Senate he should possess the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution.

There is no discretion on the part of the States with respect to the manner in which an election should be had, either of Senators or Representatives, and there is no discretion in the United States Senate as to whether a Senator who has been elected, and whose returns are here and are not questioned, should be permitted to qualify, because the qualifications are set forth clearly in the Constitution.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator has made it very clear that the questions involved in this case are exceedingly complicated; they cover constitutional questions and other questions, and I wonder if the Senator would be willing to have the pending business temporarily laid aside and have the other Senators-elect sworn in, those about whose right to be sworn in there is no question. Then we could proceed with the debate on the question whether Senator BILBO should be sworn in pending the determination of the case, or whether he should not be. The Senator says we are depriving the people of one State of the right to have a Senator sworn in. By denying this matter for today and tomorrow the Senator is depriving the people of States in which 35 Senators have been elected, whose election is unquestioned by anybody, of the right to have their representatives sworn in. I do not wish to delay the matter, but it seems to me that the proper procedure is to postpone temporarily the question of deciding whether or not Senator BILBO should be seated pending the determination of his case. It is a debatable and an important question. There have been precedents on both sides. I wonder if the Senator would be willing to postpone the decision until the Senate was organized, and, I would think, until the President's opening message was delivered to Congress on Monday. The Senator certainly has shown that this is a complicated question, it is a case in which every Senator wishes to hear the arguments, and to determine the issue in accordance with what he thinks the law and the Constitution provide. It seems to me this matter should be temporarily put aside, and should remain the business of the Senate. Let it remain the business of the Senate except for necessary organizational procedures, and the hearing of the President's message on Monday.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, let me say that if I were to agree to what he suggests I might be suspected of gross partisan politics on behalf of the Republican side, because if that were done, then since there were many more new Republicans elected than there were Democrats elected, there would be a very large Republican majority, or at least a fair majority. There would be a shifting. I might take a different view if I were sure that there was no partisanship whatsoever lurking in the minds of Senators on the other side, and that they would determine this question from a purely nonpartisan standpoint, to which assurance I myself cannot yield, in view of the fact that the Republicans met in conference and unanimously decided to reject BILBO from the Senate at the very door of the Chamber. So I do not feel that I can yield to the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio.

On the other hand, let me ask the Senator from Ohio what difference it makes having BILBO sworn in? Let us organize the Senate. What difference does it make having BILBO in? He will have one vote. That is only one vote, and if the opposition delays this matter, they will have how many? The Senator from Ohio knows how many more.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield; but let me ask the Senator this question before he starts. There is only the question of Senator BILBO, and what is proposed? Senators do not wait for a proper hearing before a proper committee, and for a report. It is true BILBO would be given one vote, as against a number of votes on the other side, I do not know exactly how many. But by seating BILBO they would do what would be absolutely fair, they would give to a man from a State sent here as its ambassador the opportunity to defend his election by his constituents and by the people of his State, and the right to defend himself against the serious charges of moral turpitude which they propose to bring against him. Does not the Senator think that would be a fairer procedure?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is perhaps familiar with the precedents, which have usually provided—and certainly I would agree with them—that if a man is prevented from taking the oath, and is excluded from the Senate, he is nevertheless given an opportunity, as has been the practice in nearly every case I know of, to appear before the Senate and state his own case. I certainly would have no objection to that procedure, even if Senator BILBO is not seated.

Mr. OVERTON. He could not claim that as a matter of right.

Mr. TAFT. No; but as a matter of precedent it has frequently been done, and it is certainly nothing to which we would have any objection.

Mr. OVERTON. It was done in the Bankhead-Heflin case. That is about the only case I know of in which it was done.

Mr. TAFT. There were others. It was done also in the Smith case. Smith was given that opportunity.

Mr. OVERTON. That may be; I believe Smith was. Those are the only two cases I can recall in which it was done. There was some debate on that matter in the Heflin case, and considerable opposition. Finally the Senate yielded, and permitted Heflin to stand here and argue his own case. Of course, he did not have the right to vote or to engage in any colloquies. He could only rise and make a statement in his own behalf.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator asked me what difference it would make. I do not know that personally it would make any difference to me in my final opinion, but there are plenty of authorities which take the position that charges such as those made against Senator BILBO by the War Investigating Committee go to the qualifications of a Senator, and therefore he may be barred by a majority vote in that kind of a case, whereas if he is once admitted, it will then take a two-thirds vote to oust him. There is a substantial issue involved in the question whether Senator BILBO shall be seated during the pendency of his case. I may not agree, but there are authorities which take the position I have stated, and that may well affect a sufficient number of votes to determine the Bilbo case.

Mr. OVERTON. It does not make any difference whether we act now, or 10 months from now, or 3 years from now, when an effort is made to bar him from the Senate on grounds other than age, residence, or citizenship, the only way it can be done is by expulsion.

Mr. TAFT. I agree with the Senator, but there are those who take the other position, and the ultimate determination of the case will depend on the votes of people who take that position. This question should be decided after adequate debate, and we should not hold up the organization of the Senate and the delivery of the President's message on the state of the Union by prolonging the debate now for several days to determine the question. I am only suggesting to the Senator that he agree temporarily to lay aside the pending matter and permit the other Senators-elect to be sworn in.

Incidentally——

Mr. OVERTON. I yielded for a question. Now let me say something.

Mr. TAFT. There is another question the Senator raised, if he will yield for an answer on that.

Mr. OVERTON. Let me ask the Senator to indulge me at that point.

Mr. TAFT. Very well.

Mr. OVERTON. Is it not true that any man charged with any serious offense in the United States of America is entitled to a fair and square hearing before a tribunal constituted for that purpose, to be accompanied by counsel, or to represent himself, to examine and cross-examine the witnesses, and to be confronted by the witnesses? Yet the Senator is asking me to let the Senate vote upon this question involving moral turpitude, upon the judgment of a committee that was never organized to make such an inquiry; and with all due respect to its members, let me say that I think it was extremely unfair that they did not give him or his counsel an opportunity to examine any of the witnesses or cross-examine the witnesses. That is wholly un-American, and I do not think the Senate would be worthy of its traditions and of the high place it has occupied in the estimate of the people of the United States and of the world if it should undertake to lynch a man by such a flagrant violation of all precedents as is suggested.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator asked me a question. In the first place, there have been, I think, 19 cases in which men have been excluded from the Senate. In 10 of those 19 cases they have been barred at the door; in 9 cases they have been ejected after they were admitted.

In the House of Representatives even more have been barred at the door. The question is not one of lynching anybody. The question is a very simple one of whether or not Senator BILBO should be made a Member of the Senate, pending the determination of whether he has a right to be made a Member of the Senate. It has nothing to do with trials, or any of the other arguments made by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. In most of the cases about which the Senator is talking, the Committee on Privileges and Elections had conducted hearings, the Senator-elect had appeared with his counsel, and witnesses, and had presented his case, and then, if a sufficiently strong case was made out against him by the report of the committee, he was barred from taking his seat; but that has not happened in this case.

In this instance two committees were involved. One of them, which had jurisdiction to inquire into expenditures in the campaign, made a favorable report. The other had no authority whatsoever to determine or to recommend to the Senate whether or not BILBO was properly elected, or whether he is entitled to a seat in the United States Senate. That committee comes here and makes a report, and on that report of an unauthorized committee, we are asked to bar BILBO from a seat in the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. As a matter of partisan politics, we are asked to bar Mr. BILBO from a seat in the Senate, and to let the majority on the other side be increased.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. The case of THEODORE G. BILBO is one that has been prejudged, and BILBO, foredoomed.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will yield, let me say that he has frequently asked with regard to the political aspect of this matter. As I see it, there is no partisanship in this report. The report, which finds that Senator BILBO improperly used his high office as United States Senator for his personal gain, in dealings with war contractors, was a bipartisan report signed by Democrats as well as Republicans.

Mr. OVERTON. I did not say there was partisanship in that report. I said the committee had no authority.

Mr. TAFT. At the present moment the Senator is arguing against a resolution offered by a Democrat, not by a Republican, and so far as our action is concerned, as I suggested to the Senator, the question of whether or not Senator BILBO should be barred at the door is sufficiently important that it ought to be determined after proper debate, and therefore should be postponed until the organization of the Senate, and until the President's message is received.

It seems to me far better to permit 35 Senators whose right is unquestioned to take their seats, than to insist that they shall be held up, while the right of 1 Senator, which is questioned, and seriously questioned, is debated by the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator need not shake his gory locks at me. I did not bring up this issue at all. With the aid, I assume, of Senators on the other side, this resolution has been introduced by a Senator from our side of the aisle; but certainly it was not brought up by me. I am not keeping other Senators from being sworn in. I am not keeping their wives and the other members of their families, who are here, from seeing them sworn in. I know the families of the new Senators would like to see them sworn in. When I was first sworn in, I had my whole family here. I marched down the aisle; and in those days we had the morning frock coats, the tall silk hats, and all that, and it was a great event. I should be very glad to have the new Senators sworn in; but I am not stopping them. It is this fight against BILBO that is stopping it.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator from Ohio and his colleagues want to continue the fight against BILBO, they will have to continue it.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes, I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I am asking the Senator whether he will not permit this matter to be temporarily set aside.

Mr. OVERTON. No, I will not. That is final.

Mr. TAFT. Then, the Senator is preventing the organization of the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. No, sir; I am not. I am fighting a resolution proposed by the Senator from Idaho and his aides on the Republican side.

Mr. WHERRY. No, we did not offer it.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand that, but the Senators on the Republican side, or some of them, are back of it. At any rate, when the fight against permitting Mr. BILBO to take the oath is at an end, we can then consider the case on its merits.

Mr. Secretary, I did not want to speak at any length. I think I have spoken about as long as I care to speak at the present time. I began without any preparation whatsoever, and I have simply referred to certain constitutional provisions, the conclusions from which are inescapable.

I think the Senate should go on record as it did in the Langer case, which is the most recent one. It will be remembered that in the Langer case the Senator from North Dakota was charged with flagrant violations of law and of having done a great many other things that a man ought not to have done. But I stated in the Langer case I was not going to read the record. I did not read a word of the Langer record, and I do not propose to read the Bilbo hearings because we do not have the constitutional authority to dispute Mr. BILBO's right to a seat in the manner proposed.

That is all I have to say for the present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, the so-called action of the Republicans simply consisted in proposing the plan which I suggested to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CVERTON]. The resolution which we should like to see the Senate adopt is this:

> Whereas charges have been filed with the Senate by a committee and Members of the Senate challenging the right of THEODORE G. BILBO to be a Member of the Senate,
> Resolved, That the question of the prima facie right of THEODORE G. BILBO to be sworn in as a Senator from the State of Mississippi, as well as his final right to a seat as such Senator, shall be considered immediately at the opening of the business of this body on January 6, 1947, following the President's message to Congress, and until this body shall decide such question of his prima facie right to be sworn, the said THEODORE G. BILBO shall not be sworn in or be permitted to occupy a seat in this body.

In other words, we propose that the status quo as to Senator BILBO be continued until the question of changing it can be adequately debated.

That is the resolution we should like to see the Senate adopt. It seems to me that that is a reasonable thing to do. Senators on both sides of the aisle differ as to whether a man should be barred at the door or not. It is an important question, which heretofore has been argued in many cases in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives. As I said, in 10 cases men were barred at the door; in 9 cases they were admitted and subsequently expelled.

The House of Representatives has a much more definite record in favor of barring at the door. The precedents are numerous; but, as I said to the Senator from Louisiana, it is an important question, because it is possible that it may affect the percentage of votes required to pass on the charges made by the War Investigating Committee. It is not a question that ought merely to be waived. It ought to be debated, and I am not proposing to foreclose it. It is the Senator from Louisiana who is trying to foreclose the question by insisting that now, before we do anything, before we take any action, before 35 Senators are sworn in, we must seat Mr. BILBO.

The proper proceeding, it seems to me, is to suspend the proceedings for 2 days, say until Monday afternoon. It was suggested by someone that it ought to be 1 week longer, to give the Members an opportunity to look into the various records that have been made, and to become better informed as to the questions which may arise. That would be all right with me; but my proposal would be to take it up immediately after the President's message has been delivered.

I have read the report of the special committee investigating the national-defense program. The committee's report certainly raises a presumptive doubt. The other committee report is a 2-to-3 report, in which is raised the question whether statements made by Senator BILBO in the election actually void the election. I do not want to foreclose debate as to the wisdom of either report. I only say that those questions have been raised, and they ought to be determined, and they ought to be determined without prejudice, and, in my opinion, the moment we seat Senator BILBO the Senate does prejudice itself in determining the ultimate outcome of this case.

I cannot see any reasonable objection to postponing the question and debating the question. The Senator from Louisiana quoted from something I said in the Langer case. In that instance I took the position that in a moral-turpitude case it was necessary to secure a two-thirds vote to oust a Member from the Senate. I said also that I never again would vote to seat an individual where a serious contest was involved, because I thought the proceedings in that case, which dragged on for a year and a half, were a most unsatisfactory solution of the question.

It seems to me that if any individual's right to a seat is in question the proper thing to do is to keep him out until the Senate actually can determine the question involved.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senate today has the right to deny Senator BILBO entrance to the Senate for any reasons, why would it not have the right to declare his seat vacant for the same reasons next week or the week following?

Mr. TAFT. Only because of the use of the words to be found in the Constitution. I do not necessarily agree with the argument made by some in this connection, but the Constitution says, of course, that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members," which is to be decided by a majority vote.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

Mr. TAFT. Whereas each House by a two-thirds vote may expel a Member.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the difference.

Mr. TAFT. So the argument is made by some that the rights of the Senate may be prejudiced by failure to act now.

Mr. GEORGE. But there is a difference between expulsion and the denial of the right to a seat. Expulsion usually and of necessity should relate to something which arises after an individual becomes a sitting Member of the Senate. That is the only sensible interpretation to give to it. But my question is very simple. If for any of the reasons that have been advanced and talked about, or that might even be imagined, the Senate today may deny Senator BILBO the right to a seat in the Senate and to take his oath of office under the certificate duly issued by the authorities of his State, why could not the Senate subsequently, under the substitute resolution submitted providing for a proceeding without prejudice as to the rights of the Senate especially, act upon those same questions hereafter in passing upon whether the seat should be declared vacant, and the State of the applicant advised that his seat has been declared vacant, if that is the opinion of the Senate?

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senate can probably do anything after a Senator is admitted that it could do before.

Mr. GEORGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TAFT. But I am not at all sure that it can do it by the same percentage of votes. That is the question.

Mr. GEORGE. In my mind there is no doubt about that. I have already taken my position here that the language of the Constitution relates to something more than the mere age of a Senator and his residence and the fact of citizenship for 9 years before he is elected to this body. It is bound to mean something more, because expulsion, properly considered, relates to something that occurs in the life of the Senator himself after he takes his seat here, or, at least, to something that was concealed when he entered this body. In such a case, the Constitution provides for a two-thirds vote. But I have no hesitancy in saying that if I were to vote to stop any Senator-elect at the door by reason of something that is already in existence, that occurred last year or the year before, or in the election, or at any time in the past, I would feel that I had a perfect right to declare his seat vacant when that issue reached the Senate.

It seems to me the fair thing to do would be not to force any Senator to prejudge this case on a record which we have not even had a chance to read or an opportunity to examine, and to let Senator BILBO, or any other Senator who comes here properly accredited by the authorities of his State, to take his seat, especially when the substitute resolution provides that he shall do so without prejudice to his rights or to the rights of the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. So far as I can see, the words "without prejudice" have not the slightest effect. I think they make no difference at all.

The Senator is aware, however, that distinguished Senate authorities take the position that the word "qualifications" means only the qualifications with respect to age, residence, and citizenship, and does not refer in any way to the moral character of the particular individual.

Mr. GEORGE. I am aware of that, and, as a matter of fact, I have great respect for that opinion. But after a long study of the Constitution itself, and of the cases that have actually come here within the past 24 years, I have reached the conclusion that that constitutional provision means something more than the mere canvassing of the returns by the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, the Senator differs in that respect from the very distinguished Senator from Louisiana who has just taken exactly the opposite position. It only illustrates to my mind the fact that the questions involved are complicated and hard to understand, that they cut across parties, and that this question is of sufficient importance that it ought to be determined after adequate debate. In my opinion, Senator BILBO loses nothing by our proceeding to organize the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; he does lose something.

Mr. TAFT. It has been stated that there are more Republicans than Democrats in the Senate. Frankly, I do not think that the question is going to be determined on a partisan basis.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think so either. I hope not at least.

Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that a greater question is involved here than the right of a man who comes from Vermont or Michigan or Mississippi or Ohio with credentials issued by the State government through the proper authorities of his State. His State has a right under the Constitution to have two representatives in this body, and it has the right to sit here in the person of one whom it has seen fit to elect and send here. That does not interfere with the right and power of the Senate to say, "Very well, we have examined into your character, into your conduct, and we find that you are guilty of such moral turpitude as to justify us in saying that your seat shall be declared vacant"; and we can do it without the slightest embarrassment. That being true, should we not respect the other fundamental provision of the Constitution which declares that every State shall have two representatives in this body, and that, except by its own consent, it can never be deprived of the right to have two representatives in the Senate of the United States? We can keep the spirit and the letter of the Constitution itself, which is much more fundamental than the decision of whether I or A or B or C has a right to come here and take a seat. We can keep the spirit and the letter of the Constitution and then proceed without the slightest embarrassment to make any inquiry into the election of the Senator or into his qualifications.

Mr. TAFT. I respect the opinion of the Senator from Georgia. The point is that others do not agree with him. The Senator from Louisiana is certainly going to claim—he probably claims now—that when Senator BILBO is seated he can be ousted only on the moral-turpitude charge, and by a two-thirds vote. So why do we not yield a substantial point in permitting Senator BILBO to be sworn in now? I do not want to pass on the question today, and I do not want to argue the question, because it is complicated as to whether he should be sworn or should not be sworn. But I say that it is a substantial question which involves constitutional difficulties and questions which should be properly argued, which Senators should have time to study. They cannot study them pending the organization of the Senate. The State of Mississippi is not injured by my request that this matter be temporarily laid aside while the organization of the Senate is completed, to be resumed and debated in full by the Senate later.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose the question raised, on which the Senate were asked to exclude a Senator-elect—in this case to deny Senator BILBO a seat—were one which went to the very vitals of the social and political integrity of the State itself; would not the State have the right to say to us, "Why do you not respect the Constitution? Let our representative take his seat. Your rights will not be prejudiced. Thereafter you can expel him."

The distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] does not believe that we can ask any question regarding the qualifications of anyone who comes to the Senate, except as to his age, his place of birth, and his residence in the State from which he may be elected for the term provided under the Constitution. Therefore, of course, the Senator from Louisiana will never vote to exclude Senator BILBO or anyone else who may be lacking in the moral qualifications which the Senate of the United States thinks a man should possess.

The proposition is very simple. If a Senator-elect can be stopped at the door for the reasons now urged, no others being involved, his seat can be declared vacant next week or next year. It seems to me that beyond possibility of doubt that statement must be true.

I do not wish to pass on the merits of this case at this time. I have no judgment as to whether Senator BILBO should be allowed to retain his seat in this body, because I have not examined a single particle of the record, and I would never try anyone on mere newspaper statements as to what some witnesses said or did not say. I apprehend that no other Senator would care to do so either. I am sure that that statement is true as regards Senators on both sides of the aisle. I had thought that the majority of the Senate had reached the conclusion, from long experience and from a study of the precedents as well as the law, that the qualifications of which the Senate is the judge are much broader than the inhibitions, prohibitions, or negative requirements stated in the Constitution itself.

Let me say in all sincerity and all candor that when the Smith case arose I was a Member of this body. I believe that no other Member of the present Senate, with the exception of the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who has not yet been permitted to take his sixth oath, was a Member of this body at that time.

The Smith case involved the question of fraud and corruption in the primary. I very well remember that it was practically undisputed that Colonel Smith himself had received $200,000 from the utility companies of the State of Illinois, or from at least one of them, at a time when he was chairman of the utilities commission of that State. The facts disclosed that approximately $350,000 was used in that election, very largely for his benefit. A large part of it was contributed by the utility companies of the State.

Colonel Smith was given the right to be heard. He practically admitted the facts in that case. When Senator McKinley passed away, Colonel Smith already having been nominated, the Governor of the State appointed him, and he came here as an appointee of the Governor. We felt that inasmuch as we were already investigating his conduct which affected the validity of his election, and inasmuch as we had already gone into the case it would not be seemly or necessary to give him the privilege of taking the oath and occupying his seat.

Mr. TAFT. However, as a result of that action, which is substantially what I am suggesting in this case, the State of Illinois was deprived of a seat in the United States Senate, a procedure to which the Senator is now objecting.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator voted to bar Smith at the door.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I did. I voted to bar him because of fraud in the primary, because I took the same position then that I now hold, that the primary was an essential part of the election processes in the State, and that fraud in obtaining the nomination was just about as bad as fraud in obtaining the final election. But the Senate was already investigating Smith. The issue had already been raised when the Governor simply threw him into the face of the Senate and sent him here with his credentials. We stopped him at the door.

Mr. TAFT. But he was also stopped at the door with respect to the full term for which he had been elected.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true.

Mr. TAFT. In the Smith case, Smith was barred for the full term for which he had been elected, and for which he bore the certificate of election of the Governor of Illinois.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is quite correct. We found that his election was tainted with fraud. I know that the Senator wishes to proceed in the proper way in this matter. In the Vare case this issue again arose. There was the question as to whether or not Mr. Vare should be permitted to take his seat. The question continued to arise in one form or another, until the case of Mr. Gould, from Maine, the State of the distinguished majority leader-elect. I hope the Senator from Maine can find the final vote in that case.

Mr. Gould came here, and at that time we made the most painstaking investigation of this very question. As I now recall the facts, in that election in Maine Mr. Gould was charged with having received a bribe a dozen years or more before. A master in chancery in one of the provinces in Canada had charged him with having received a bribe. On the basis of that record, he having been elected to the Senate, it was proposed by some very able Senators that he not be permitted to take the oath. We had made a conscientious study of the question in the Smith case and in the Vare case. We were trying to arrive at some decent rule which would give full effect to the constitutional provision that no State should be deprived of its right to be represented in the Senate on matters which vitally affect it in its organization and in its social and political life. So we decided that, although Mr. Gould was known to have been charged by an officer of the law in Canada with having received a bribe as one of the organizers of the railroad in Canada, in the solemn judgment of the court in that province, the thing to do was to allow Mr. Gould to take the oath of office and allow the case to proceed without prejudice, to be determined later on its merits.

The distinguished Senator from Montana, the late Senator Thomas J. Walsh, had the most pronounced views of any lawyer in this body that the Senate had the full right to inquire into the qualifications of Mr. Gould, after he had been sworn, as well as before he had been sworn. Mr. Gould's case was referred to the proper committee of the Senate. I was chairman of that committee at the time. At least I know that I was chairman of a subcommittee of that committee; and with a distinguished Member of this body, who is now an honored judge—Judge Sam Bratton, of the State of New Mexico, who is now on the tenth circuit, I believe—and with a Republican member of the committee, we heard the case of Mr. Gould. We reached the conclusion at that time that there was no reason shown to us why Mr. Gould's seat should be declared vacant.

Then there was the case of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER]. I believe that by unanimous consent he was allowed to take the oath, the investigation to proceed forthwith, without prejudice to him or prejudice to the right of the Senate to determine whether or not prior conduct upon his part, just as in this case, would justify the Senate in declaring his seat vacant.

That, undoubtedly, is a rule that can always be safely followed without doing any violence to other provisions of our Constitution. It is a rule for which I have always pleaded, and I am pleading for it now. My position, of course, is well known to the Senator from Ohio. I think we have the right, if we wish, to stop one at the door if sufficient facts are in our possession; but I think it is far better to say, "We will have the same right after you come in, and we will let you take your oath, and we will let all the other provisions of the Constitution which we have sworn to uphold, as well as this particular provision, take full force and effect."

That would seem to me to be the way this matter should be handled. If it were handled in that way, I can see no reason why the oath of office might not be administered to all the Senators-elect present, and we could proceed with other business.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, it does not seem to me that the Senator's argument has any relation to the question we have before us. The question is whether we shall temporarily, in effect, lay aside the question of Mr. BILBO and other constitutional questions involved and proceed to the organization of the Senate, or whether we shall tie up the Senate for some days, at any rate, in discussing the question—and it ought to be discussed—and, because of the insistence that one State shall be represented, thereby, by that action, incidentally deprive 34 or 35 other States of representation in the Senate and deprive the country of the organization of the Senate, which is so necessary in order to proceed with the business which is before the Nation.

I make a very simple request. It is that the question of determining the prima facie right of the Senator-elect from Mississippi to a seat in the Senate be postponed until Monday. If I could get a unanimous-consent agreement that if Mr. BILBO is sworn in he can then be objected to on the charges of the War Investigating Committee, by a majority vote, I would not object to his being sworn in, but there can be no such agreement. There is a basic difference of opinion among Senators on this side of the aisle as well as Senators on the other side of the aisle on that question, so the question would not be foreclosed even by a unanimous-consent agreement, which cannot be obtained. So it seems to me that the thing to do is to set aside this matter temporarily.

Since unanimous consent for that is refused, I intend to move to lay the entire matter on the table. I shall then move, after the President's message is delivered on Monday, to take the matter up again and debate at that time the question of the prima facie right of the Senator-elect from Mississippi to be sworn.

We have had an adequate preliminary debate. In my own time the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has talked longer than I have talked. I therefore move that the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] together with the original resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] be laid on the table; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SECRETARY. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BRIDGES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Reed
Baldwin	Hayden	Revercomb

The SECRETARY. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. Secretary, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from West Virginia will state it.

Mr. REVERCOMB. If the motion that is pending is carried, does it lay on the table both the resolution of the Senator from Idaho and the proposed substitute of the Senator from Louisiana?

The SECRETARY. It does.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Kentucky will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the motion to lay on the table both the resolution and the proposed substitute be carried, what then will be the parliamentary status insofar as concerns other motions or unanimous-consent requests relative to the matter now before the Senate, regarding the seating of the Senator from Mississippi? Will other motions of a different nature be in order, or will further unanimous-consent requests be in order, assuming that the motion to lay on the table the resolution and amendment is carried?

The SECRETARY. In the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, they would be.

Mr. BARKLEY. They would be?

The SECRETARY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Chair.

The SECRETARY. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like the record to show that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent because of a death in his family.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 20, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2

Cordon Magnuson

So Mr. TAFT's motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary, my colleague-elect from Maine, Mr. BREWSTER, is in the Chamber. His credentials are on file with the Secretary's office. They are in due and proper form. My colleague-elect is worthy, and I move that the oath of office be administered to him.

Mr. OVERTON. I move, as a substitute, that Senator-elect THEODORE G. BILBO, of the State of Mississippi, be permitted to take the oath and to qualify as a Senator from the State of Mississippi, forthwith.

Mr. TAFT. I move to lay on the table the substitute motion of the Senator from Lousiana.

The SECRETARY. The question is on the motion to lay on the table, and the motion is not debatable. [Putting the question.]

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, I inquire, is the motion of the Senator from Maine debatable?

The SECRETARY. The motion of the Senator from Maine is debatable.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary, the Senator from Lousiana has the floor and had made a motion. He cannot be taken off his feet in such cavalier fashion.

The SECRETARY. The vote has not yet been completed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I make the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Ohio was out of order because the Senator from Louisiana had made a motion and apparently had addressed himself to the motion. He had the floor.

The SECRETARY. The vote has not yet been completed.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry. Is not the status of the parliamentary situation as follows: The Senator from Maine moved that his colleague-elect be permitted to take the oath of office, and as a substitute for that the Senator from Louisiana moved that the Senator-elect from Mississippi, Mr. BILBO, be permitted to take the oath and the Senator from Ohio moved that that motion be laid on the table?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, the fact that a Senator makes a motion does not mean that he continues to hold the floor. He has to be recognized after the motion is made, as I understand. At the time the Senator from Lousiana made his motion I was recognized, and I made a motion to lay his motion on the table. It seems to me that should be disposed of.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, I had the floor, and I did not yield.

The SECRETARY. The motion of the Senator from Ohio was to lay on the table.

Mr. OVERTON. I did not yield for that.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand the situation, I made the motion that my colleague be given the oath of office, and a motion was made to amend that motion. The Senator from Ohio moved to lay on the table the amendment proposed to my motion. That is not debatable.

The SECRETARY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Chair would like to make an observation. The Chair put the question on the motion of the Senator from Ohio. The vote was not completed. The Chair did not put the negative.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SECRETARY. That is not in order until the motion of the Senator from Ohio is disposed of.

Mr. OVERTON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Did not the senior Senator from Louisiana have the floor when the Senator from Ohio made his motion to table, and is it not a fact that the Senator from Louisiana did not yield to him for that purpose? Can the Senator from Louisiana be taken off the floor in such manner?

The SECRETARY. The Chair assumed that the Senator from Louisiana had completed his remarks, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Ohio to make his motion. Those opposed to the motion of the Senator from Ohio will so indicate.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SECRETARY. Is the demand sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order that Senators may have an intelligent conception of the parliamentary situation, I ask the Chair, What will be the effect of a vote to adopt the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana? Will the effect be to lay both the motion of the Senator from Louisiana as a substitute and the motion of the Senator from Maine on the table, or will the effect be only to lay on the table the substitute offered by the Senator from Louisiana?

The SECRETARY. The effect will be to lay on the table only the substitute of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. RUSSELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. After the Senate shall have voted upon the motion to table made by the Senator from Ohio, the motion of the Senator from Maine will be debatable, will it not?

The SECRETARY. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Chair.

The SECRETARY. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I repeat the announcement heretofore made, that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent because of a death in his family.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 19, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2

Cordon Magnuson

So Mr. TAFT's motion to lay on the table the motion of Mr. OVERTON was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is the pending motion debatable?

The SECRETARY. It is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I claim the floor to debate the motion.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, I take the floor as a member of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Contributions. I was not named on that committee in the first instance. A resignation took place during the summer, and the Presiding Officer asked me to fill the place made vacant. I consented. As a member of that committee, I attended the hearings held in Jackson, Miss. Inasmuch as this case is now under discussion, and inasmuch as it will be thoroughly discussed before any vote is had, I think the record should be made as clear as possible. I send to the desk the resolution that was adopted by the Senate, under which the committee to which I have alluded operated. I ask that the resolution be read.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 224), as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, from States in which no Senator is to be elected at the general election in 1946, is hereby authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to—

(1) the extent and nature of the expenditures made by all candidates for the office of the United States Senator in 1946 in connection with their campaigns for nomination and election to such office;

(2) the amounts subscribed and contributed, and the value of services rendered and facilities made available (including personal services, and the use of billboards and other advertising space, radio time, office space, moving-picture films, and automobiles and other transportation facilities), by any individual, group of individuals, partnership, association, or corporation to or on behalf of each such candidate in connection with any such campaign, or for the purpose of influencing the votes cast or to be cast at any primary or general election, or at any convention, held in 1946, at which a candidate for United States Senator is to be nominated or elected;

(3) the expenditure of funds appropriated by the Congress with a view to determining whether any such funds have been or are being expended by any department, independent agency, or instrumentality of the United States, by any State or political subdivision thereof, or by any instrumentality of any State or political subdivision thereof, in such a manner as to influence the votes cast or to be cast for any such candidate at any such primary or general election or convention;

(4) the use of any other means or influence (including the promise or use of patronage) for the purpose of aiding or influencing the nomination or election of any such candidates; and

(5) such other matters relating to the election of United States Senators in 1946, and the campaigns of candidates in connection therewith, as the committee deems to be of public interest, and which in its opinion will aid the Senate in enacting remedial legislation or in deciding any contests that may be instituted involving the right to a seat in the Senate.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized to act upon its own motion and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made to the committee, under oath, by any person, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in such complaint are immaterial or untrue. All hearings before the committee, and before any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, shall be public, and all orders and decisions of the committee, and of any such subcommittee, shall be public.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such public hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-ninth Congress, to employ such attorneys, experts, clerical, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $30,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any duly authorized subcommittee thereof.

SEC. 4. The committee by majority vote may authorize any member of the committee, or any member of a duly authorized subcommittee, to conduct on behalf of the committee any part of the investigation herein provided for, and for such purpose any member so authorized may hold public hearings, issue subpenas, and provide for the service thereof, require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents, administer oaths, and take testimony.

SEC. 5. The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, may authorize any one or more persons to conduct on behalf of the committee any part of the investigation herein provided for, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such public hearings, issue such subpenas, and provide for the service thereof, require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony, as the committee, or any such duly authorized subcommittee, may from time to time authorize.

SEC. 6. The committee shall report to the Senate on the first day of the next regular session of the Congress the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, the resolution provides that the report of the committee shall be filed on the first day of the session succeeding the adoption of the resolution. The committee, of which I am a member, prepared its report. It has been printed. I send a copy of the report to the desk and ask that it be read.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, I object.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, in order that I may read the report, and that some of those on the other side of the aisle may have the privilege of hearing what this report says, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Reed
Baldwin	Hayden	Revercomb
Ball	Hickenlooper	Robertson, Wyo.
Barkley	Hill	Russell
Bridges	Hoey	Saltonstall
Brooks	Johnson, Colo.	Stewart
Buck	Johnston, S. C.	Taft
Bushfield	Lucas	Taylor
Capehart	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.

Ellender	Moore	Wherry
Ferguson	Morse	White
Fulbright	Murray	Wiley
George	Myers	Wilson
Green	O'Daniel	Young
Gurney	Overton
Hatch	Pepper

The SECRETARY. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question, or if I do not lose the floor.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. Secretary, from the Special Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946, I desire to file the report of the committee, as well as the minority views.

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield for that purpose?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for that purpose.

The SECRETARY. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I submit an additional report of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, as well as the testimony taken by the committee.

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Michigan object to the request made by the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; I have no objection.

The SECRETARY. Without objection, the report submitted by the Senator from Louisiana will be received and printed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, if the Senator from Michigan will modify his request and ask that the report and the testimony be filed at the end of my remarks, I have no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. I will ask that that be done.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Secretary, does the Senator from Michigan want all the testimony printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; I do not wish to have it printed in the RECORD, because we have copies for all Senators. But I wish to present the testimony to the Senate. Copies of the testimony as well as the report of the committee have been distributed and are on the desks of all Senators.

The SECRETARY. Without objection, the additional report submitted by the Senator from Michigan from the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, as well as the testimony taken before that committee, will be printed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], has just filed the report of his committee and the minority views. I take it for granted they will not be printed in full in the RECORD. At a later time I shall read the majority report, which was concurred in by the three Members who signed the report.

I am glad to note in the Senate Chamber, to my left, a distinguished former Senator of the United States from my State. He was elected at the beginning of statehood in Oklahoma, 40 years ago. He served during two different periods in this body. Former Senator Thomas P. Gore was born in the State of Mississippi. It is unfortunate for the Senate and the country that he is not here in the capacity of a Senator, so he could discuss the pending issue, because he could give us first-hand information respecting the political sentiment that prevails in the great State of Mississippi.

To the left of Senator Gore is another distinguished former Senator from my State, Hon. Josh Lee.

Mr. Secretary, since this matter is to be thoroughly discussed, I think the background should be laid as thoroughly as possible, so that each Member of this body may vote with all the information that it is possible to obtain. Mississippi has a population of more than two million. The population of Mississippi is approximately one-half white and one-half colored. The last census shows that there are 31,000 more white people than colored people in the State.

As a member of the committee I interrogated the witnesses who came upon the witness stand. Approximately 90 colored witnesses appeared and testified. I did not ask each this question, but I asked a number this question: In what State were you born? That question was propounded to the colored witnesses. I found only one colored witness who testified that he had been born outside the State of Mississippi. Some of the white witnesses who testified stated that they had been born outside the State of Mississippi. The evidence taken at Jackson disclosed conclusively that a very large percentage of the population of that State, both white and black, were native-born, that is, born within the boundaries of the State of Mississippi. Some stated that more than 90 percent of the population of the State were born in Mississippi. Others hazarded the guess that even a larger percentage than 90 percent were native-born citizens of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. Secretary, Senators may draw their own conclusions. I shall give mine. The white citizens of Mississippi, men and women, are the sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons, and daughters, granddaughters, and great-granddaughters of former slave owners of that State. The present population of Mississippi come from a stock of people who either owned slaves in Mississippi or were in sympathy with the slave-holding system in Mississippi.

The people of that great State cannot understand now, and they will not understand in the near future, how the Congress of the United States can dictate to them as to who shall be their representatives in this great body. This is not a question of whether or not Senator BILBO shall be seated in the Senate. The question is larger than that. This question places the State of Mississippi on trial. Not only is the State of Mississippi on trial, but every other State in the South is on trial. Not only is every State in the South on trial, but every State of this Union, north and south, east and west, is on trial. If we can dictate the terms and conditions under which the people of the State of Mississippi shall select their Senators, we can dictate the conditions under which every other Southern State selects their Senators; and if we can dictate the system under which the South selects its Senators, we can then dictate the terms and conditions under which the Northern States shall select their Senators.

I have before me an abstract of the primary-election laws of all the States of this Republic. I am not in agreement with the election laws of some of the States, but the issue here today is the forerunner of a universal mandatory primary-election law for each of the States of the Union.

In California a man may announce for Senator on the Republican ticket. The same man may announce for Senator on the Democratic ticket. The same man may announce for Senator on the Socialist ticket, and on the Prohibition ticket, if there be one. It is possible for one man to win the nomination on all the tickets that are presented on the ballot. Some of the other States can do the same thing.

I make this statement—and I think it can be verified by the citizens of Mississippi: It makes no difference who the candidates are in that State for Governor, for Senator, or for Representative; they share the same ideas with respect to the issue raised in connection with this question. Senator BILBO may have been undiplomatic. He may have been a little more positive than some of the other candidates. But I make the statement, upon my conviction, that no man in the State of Mississippi can be elected to this body unless he shares the viewpoint that we heard expressed by the white witnesses in 4 days of hearings in the city of Jackson, the capital of the State of Mississippi.

The people of Mississippi believe that the selection of officers should be made by the white people. I shall not discuss that issue. That is their belief. Never before, so I am advised, have the colored people undertaken to cast ballots in a white Democratic primary, or any Democratic primary, or any other primary in Mississippi. There is only one party in Mississippi, and that is the Democratic Party. There are two groups of opponents of the Democratic Party in Mississippi. One group is known as the Lily-White Republicans. It is a very small group, not numerous enough to make a party, not numerous enough to have candidates on the tickets in the various counties or in the congressional districts, or in the State at large. It is only large enough so that if the election should turn its way, there would be a group which could be drawn upon to fill the appointive offices in the State of Mississippi, such as United States marshals and deputies, district attorneys and deputies, and postmasters.

There is a second group in Mississippi in opposition to the Democratic Party. It is known as the Black-and-Tan group. It is made up, of course, of the colored people of that State. The second group is not sufficiently organized in Mississippi to form a party. It is not sufficiently numerous to have candidates on the county tickets, the city tickets, the congressional tickets, or the State ticket.

So there is but one political party in the State of Mississippi, at least for practical purposes. In Mississippi there is a conviction that a colored voter is a Republican voter. We did not interrogate all the witnesses on this question. We did ask some of the colored voters how they voted in the primary, because some of them voted. They refused to tell us. They said that their votes were private; and when they stated that their votes were private, the committee respected their wishes. We did not press the question.

Mr. Secretary, the opinion prevails among the white people of Mississippi that a colored man or a colored woman, if permitted to vote his views, will vote the Republican ticket. I think one or two of the witnesses testified that they were Democrats.

I made the statement a moment ago that this issue is not closed. It is to be discussed in this forum at some length. This issue lays a foundation for the introduction of a Nation-wide uniform primary-election system that will be in force in each of the States of this Nation. When that time comes, if it comes, and if it involves in any section violence or trouble, what may we expect to see in the future? We may expect to see Federal soldiers at the polling places, not only in the South, but throughout the entire United States.

Mr. Secretary, when our committee decided to go to Mississippi to hold hearings, one of the timid members of the committee suggested that we should employ bodyguards. He gave expression to the fear that he would not be safe in Mississippi investigating an election for which a candidate had been elected for the United States Senate. The other members of the committee did not take that suggestion seriously. We did not take any bodyguards to Mississippi. There was no trouble there. There was no more trouble in Mississippi than in any other State in the Nation. The hearing was entirely quiet and peaceful. There was no suggestion of any opposition to the hearing which was held in the Federal Court Building, in the city of Jackson, the capital of the State of Mississippi.

Not only does this case open up the possibility of a mandatory primary-election law throughout the Nation; it opens up two more questions of vital import. I understand that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] is about to introduce in this body a Nation-wide uniform marriage and divorce bill. Not only shall we have the opportunity of considering the advisability of having a uniform Nation-wide primary-election law for all the States, the same in each State, but we shall be going into the question of marriages and divorces. The laws thereon are not the same in all the States. In some of the States whites and blacks may marry. In such States there is no inhibition against their marriage. That situation does not obtain in the State of Oklahoma, and my State would not be agreeable to the enactment of that kind of legislation. In some of the States before a man and woman can be married they must subject themselves to a blood test a certain number of days before the performance of the ceremony.

If we should go to the extent of providing uniform laws governing marriage and requiring blood tests and all that sort of thing, it is within the province of the Congress to embark upon such a wide schedule of operations. This contest may be the forerunner of a new deal in our national affairs.

In some States divorce laws are different from the divorce laws in other States. I understand that in the District of Columbia there is only one ground that will justify the courts in issuing divorce decrees. In some States there is more than one ground upon which a divorce decree may be granted. In my State I think there are something like 10 grounds. Other States have even larger numbers of grounds for divorce.

I doubt if the States of the Nation are ready and willing at this time to consider uniform marriage and divorce laws. That is what this issue leads up to if the Senate takes the action which is now contemplated by those on the majority side of this body.

In order that the Senate may have an opportunity at least to know what the majority report contains, I propose to read that report into the RECORD. I refer to the report just filed by the chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946:

SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES, 1946

Mr. ELLENDER, from the Special Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946, submitted the following report (pursuant to S. Res. 224):

On September 19, 1946, there was filed with this committee a sworn complaint signed by T. B. Wilson and other residents of the State of Mississippi protesting the nomination and election of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO. This complaint, together with the signatures appended thereto is as follows:

"To: The honorable Senate of the United States of America.

"Attention: Committee on Privileges and Elections. Committee on Campaign Expenditures.

"The undersigned hereby petition for the redress of the following grievances and respectfully show and allege:

"1. The signatories hereto are residents of the State of Mississippi and are duly qualified electors of the State of Mississippi.

"2. Whenever the term 'duly qualified Negro electors' is used, it shall mean Negro citizens of Mississippi who have duly qualified to register and vote in general or special elections for Federal, State, and local offices, including the office of United States Senator from Mississippi, and Negro citizens possessing the legal qualifications to register and vote in such elections.

"3. In the primary of the Democratic Party of Mississippi to select a candidate for the United States Senate for the term commencing January 1, 1947, and in which an election was held on July 2, 1946, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, the incumbent, obtained a bare majority of less than 4,000 votes, of the votes cast and officially counted, over his opponents and thereupon was certified, became, and is the candidate of the Democratic Party of Mississippi for the office of Senator of the United States from that State.

"4. By custom, tradition, and precedent, and because of the absence of an organized or effective party of opposition to the Democratic Party of Mississippi within that State, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO is assured of his reelection to the office of United States Senator from Mississippi and indeed will face no opposition candidate in the general election.

"5. During the aforesaid primary and up to and including July 2, 1946, the date of the election thereof, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO conducted an aggressive and ruthless campaign for his reelection to the office of United States Senator from Mississippi with the purpose, object, design, and calculation to effectively deprive and deny the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi of their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote and otherwise legally participate in the said primary election.

"6. Because, amongst other things, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO has been notorious in his hostility toward the Negro people and has exercised all his energies to keep the Negro people in a subordinate and servile status, and because he has become a symbol of oppression and reaction against the Negro people in the estimation of the people of the United States, and particularly in the estimation of the Negro people of the United States, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO had knowledge or reason to know that the overwhelming majority of duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, totaling approximately 500,000 persons, would vote in the said primary election in opposition and adversely to the candidacy of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, and it was the intention of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO to frustrate, suppress, stifle, and overcome the opposition of the duly qualified Negro electors to the candidacy of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO in the aforesaid primary, and thus effectively to deprive and deny these electors of their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote and otherwise legally participate in the said primary election.

"7. In order to accomplish and effectuate the aforesaid purpose, object, design, and calculation, and to carry out his intention, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO—

"(1) Engaged in and inspired systematic and continuous attacks upon the Negro race in general and upon the Negro population of Mississippi in particular, and especially against the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi; these attacks were accompanied by and took the form of vituperative, insulting, abusive, and slanderous statements, holding up the Negro race in general and the Negro population of Mississippi in particular, especially the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, to hatred, opprobrium, contempt, and ridicule;

"(2) Exhorted, agitated, and made inflammatory appeals to the passions and prejudices of the white population of Mississippi to foster, stimulate, inspire, create, and intensify a state of acute and aggravated tension between the white and Negro races in the State of Mississippi, and utilized and directed this acute and aggravated racial tension for narrow, selfish, and political purposes, to wit, to prevent and deny the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi from exercising or attempting to exercise their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote or otherwise lawfully participate in the said primary election; and

"(3) With willful intent, individually and in concert with others, advocated, counseled, inspired, encouraged, incited, aided, and abetted the white population of Mississippi to commit acts of violence and intimidation against the Negro population of Mississippi, and especially against the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, so as to discourage, frustrate, suppress, stifle, and overcome the desire and intention of the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi of exercising or attempting to exercise their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote or otherwise lawfully participate in said primary election.

"8. The conduct, acts, and statements of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and the acts of violence and intimidation against the Negro people of Mississippi, as described above, and accomplished as hereinafter set forth, were crimes against and violations of the criminal statutes and laws of the United States of America and the State of Mississippi.

"9. As a direct or proximate consequence of the conduct, acts, and statements of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, as above alleged, wholesale incidents of attacks by white residents of Mississippi upon Negro residents of Mississippi occurred throughout the State of Mississippi during the said primary campaign, including acts of violence and intimidation against duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi; these attacks and acts of violence and intimidation were willfully and wantonly perpetrated (a) by white residents of the State of Mississippi, acting individually or in furtherance of a conspiracy with others or with Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, to deprive and deny the qualified Negro electors of Mississippi of their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote or otherwise lawfully participate in the said primary election, and (b) by white public officials of the State of Mississippi, acting under color of law, with like willfulness, wantonness, intent, and purpose.

"10. As a result of the foregoing the Negro people of Mississippi, especially the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, were subjected to a campaign and reign of terror during the said primary election; and the Negro people of Mississippi, especially the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, were placed in a state of fear, terror, coercion, and duress to the extent that the overwhelming majority of the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi were discouraged, frustrated, suppressed, stifled, fettered, and overcome in exercising or attempting to exercise their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote, or to vote if already registered, or to otherwise lawfully participate in the said primary election; and under the circumstances, such fear, terror, coercion, and duress, followed by the action or inaction above described, were reasonable and reasonably justified."

I am reading from the charges filed before the committee, upon which the committee acted, upon which the committee went to Mississippi and held hearings, and upon which this committee report is predicated. I shall continue to read from the charges. I now read from charge No. 11 against Senator BILBO:

11. By reason of the foregoing and as a direct or proximate consequence of the successful accomplishment and effectuation of the purpose, object, design, and calculation of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, and the successful carrying out of his intention, as aforesaid, the election of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO as the Democratic candidate for the United States Senate from Mississippi was and is illegal, void, and contrary to law, and such election was and is tainted and permeated with fraud, duress, and illegality. The said election of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO was not free or unfettered, but, on the contrary, was achieved by force and violence and the use of criminal, extralegal, and illegal tactics and in wanton disrespect and disregard and in derogation of the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the United States under the United States Constitution, particularly the fifteenth amendment thereof, and of the laws of the United States in such cases made and provided, and of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as in violation of the laws and statutes of the State of Mississippi.

12. Except for the fraud, duress, illegality, force, and violence, as above alleged, the overwhelming majority of the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi would have voted in opposition and adversely to the said candidacy of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and their votes would have materially affected the result of the said primary election and would have resulted in the defeat of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, or, at least, would have resulted in the failure or inability of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO in securing a majority of the votes cast and officially counted in said primary election, thus necessitating a run-off, which, in all reasonable probability, would have resulted in the defeat of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO.

13. By his conduct, acts, and words, and by reason of the foregoing, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO—

(a) Has violated his oath of office of United States Senator to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States and its laws;

(b) Cannot reasonably be relied upon in the future to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States and its laws;

(c) Cannot reasonably be relied upon in the future to honor the oath of office required to be made by United States Senators to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States and its laws; and——

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. OVERTON. Was it disclosed during the course of the hearings who was the author of these charges? It was not any Mississippi lawyer, because they do not plead in such voluminous language and indulge in such extreme repetition of words as we find contained in this document. It seems to me it must have been prepared by some lawyer far away from Mississippi, or a number of lawyers. Was the evidence clear as to that?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; the evidence was unmistakably clear that these charges were inspired and prepared by the representatives and attorneys of an organization known as the Civil Rights Congress, of the city of New York and the State of New York.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand, then, about the form of the pleadings.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I was reading of the charges made by citizens of New York City and New York State against the seating of Senator BILBO as a Senator from the State of Mississippi. I think I was down to subdivision (d), and I continue the reading:

(d) Has advocated, counseled, inspired, encouraged, incited, aided, and abetted in the violation of the laws of the United States and the State of Mississippi; and

(e) Has exhibited a crass, wanton, and shocking disrespect and disregard for the constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities of United States citizens to exercise their political franchise to vote in elections for public offices; and

(f) Has demonstrated a cynical contempt for the orderly processes of government; and

(g) Has endangered and undermined the foundations of orderly and democratic government; and

(h) Has subscribed and subscribes to principles, ideas, and philosophies of government which are alien, repugnant, and inimical to the principles, ideas, and philosophies upon which the Government of the United States and the States of the Union are founded; and

(i) Has fostered, stimulated, inspired, and encouraged conflict, division, and disunity amongst the American people by pitting race against race, religion against religion, and nationality groups against other nationality groups; and

(j) Has brought the august and honorable United States Senate into contempt, ridicule, and disrepute; and

(k) Has been and now is a member of the Ku Klux Klan, a secret, conspiratorial, and illegal organization with past connections with known enemies of the United States of America, to wit, the German-American Bund, and has subscribed and still subscribes to the principles and actions of the said Ku Klux Klan, which has committed acts of lynching, near-lynching, assaults and batteries, false and unlawful detentions, and other crimes of violence and intimidation; and

(l) Has demonstrated his unfitness to hold the honorable position of a United States Senator.

14. Annexed hereto and made part of this petition, marked "Exhibit 1," and in substantiation and documentation of the allegations of this petition, are excerpts of statements, speeches, and writings of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO made during the aforesaid primary campaign.

15. Annexed hereto and made part of this petition, marked "Exhibit 2," and in substantiation and documentation of the allegations of this petition, is a photostatic copy of a radio interview between Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and certain newspapermen, held on August 9, 1946, over the Mutual Broadcasting Co. system on Meet the Press program.

16. Annexed hereto and made part of this petition, marked "Exhibit 3," and in further substantiation and documentation of the allegations of this petition, are photostatic copies of statements of Negro residents of Mississippi, indicating instances and describing occurrences of acts of violence and intimidation by white residents of Mississippi, including white public officials of the State of Mississippi, acting under color of law, against Negro residents of Mississippi and showing the acts of violence and intimidation practiced against the Negro residents of Mississippi, including the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi and showing further the fraud and illegality practiced against the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi. The originals of these statements are in the possession and files of the Civil Rights Congress, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y., which directed, supervised, and participated in the collection of these statements. Other and additional statements showing and describing similar occurrences against other duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi are in the possession and file of the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

Wherefore, the undersigned respectfully petition and request:

(1) The appropriate Senate committee or committees to conduct a full, fair, and fearless investigation into the allegations of this petition and the charges contained therein; and

(2) In connection with such investigation to hold public hearings in and throughout the State of Mississippi and in Washington, D. C., wherein witnesses shall be summoned to testify and give evidence under oath, and such other evidence, including the taking of depositions, as is material, relevant, and pertinent be incorporated in the record; and

(3) Upon the basis of the allegations of this petition and the charges contained therein and the documentary evidence submitted herewith, and any further evidence which may be disclosed as a result of the aforesaid investigation and hearings, the appropriate Senate committee or committees having jurisdiction over the matters herein set forth report and recommend to the Senate of the United States that Senator THEODORE G. BILBO be impeached and removed from his seat as the United States Senator from Mississippi and that the election of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO as the Democratic nominee for the office of United States Senator from Mississippi be declared null and void, contrary to law, and tainted with fraud, duress, illegality, force, and violence, and that a new election be held for such office; and

(4) The Senate of the United States impeach Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and remove him from his office as United States Senator from Mississippi and declare his election as the Democratic nominee for the office of United States Senator from Mississippi to be null and void, contrary to law, and tainted with fraud, duress, illegality, force, and violence, and deny to Senator THEODORE G. BILBO any and all privileges, rights, and immunities which he may possess by virtue of being elected United States Senator from the State of Mississippi for the term commencing January 1, 1947, and also deny Senator THEODORE G. BILBO the right to subscribe to the oath of office for such new term as United States Senator from Mississippi and otherwise to refuse to seat Senator THEODORE G. BILBO as the United States Senator from Mississippi for such new term.

Dated: State of Mississippi, September 1946.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is unavoidably detained.

The SECRETARY. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, I have just read that portion of the report which embraces charges filed against the seating of Senator BILBO, and it was these charges that induced the committee to go to Mississippi to hold hearings. The entire committee went, and it held hearings in the Federal courtroom in Jackson, Miss. We had long sessions, held during 4 days, and after the scheduled witnesses had appeared and testified under oath, no one else was denied. Every colored person who wanted to be heard was heard at length. Every white person who wanted to be heard was heard at length. After the list of witnesses had been exhausted, those that were subpenaed and those that came voluntarily, the committee met and proceeded to formulate its report.

I am now reading the conclusions of the majority of the committee:

Upon receipt of this complaint, three committee investigators were sent to Mississippi, where for 6 weeks a preliminary investigation into the matters alleged in the complaint was conducted, culminating in the submission to the committee on October 31, 1946, of a 33-page report, together with numerous exhibits, affidavits, and statements of witnesses interviewed by them. In light of this report this committee on November 16, 1946, unanimously voted that public hearings into the matters covered by the complaint be held in Mississippi, these hearings taking place at Jackson, Miss., from December 2 to December 5, 1946. The record of the hearings has been ordered printed as a Senate document, together with certain exhibits and the basic complaint. No complaint respecting campaign expenditures on the part of any candidate from Mississippi has been made to this committee and the matter of campaign expenditures was in no manner at issue in the investigation of Senator BILBO's campaign.

I should like to observe that this report was printed and filed only this afternoon. The Members of this body have had no chance to read it. It has not been available. Since I started to read the report the Senate has been in constant disorder; apparently but few Members are paying any attention to the subject of the charges made against Senator BILBO, and few Senators are paying any attention to the findings of the majority of the committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I simply wish to point out that the matter now before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] to have the oath of office administered to his colleague, Mr. BREWSTER. So Senators have a perfect right to disregard the wholly irrelevant remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, in this great forum any Senator has the right to rise and make any statement he sees fit to make. The Senator from Ohio has just exercised that privilege.

Mr. TAFT rose.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, I have the floor, and I am discussing a question at issue before the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. TAFT. I merely wanted to point out that the Senator was complaining that Senators were not listening to him. My answer to that is that the Senator is talking on wholly irrelevant matters which are not before the Senate at the time, and therefore Senators have a perfect right not to listen to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The country has an opinion different from that expressed by the Senator from Ohio, as will be evidenced by the newspapers tomorrow morning. There is only one issue before the Senate, and that is the seating of the Senator-elect from the State of Mississippi. Senators may inject other matters and motions from time to time as they see fit, but they cannot get away from the fundamental issue, and that is whether Mr. BILBO shall be sworn in as a Senator from the State of Mississippi.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. TAFT. In effect, the Senate, by a two-thirds vote, has postponed that question for 3 days, until next Monday. Therefore, the matter now discussed by the Senator from Oklahoma is not before the Senate at this time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I challenge the statement of the Senator from Ohio. The Bilbo issue has not been either postponed or settled.

I continue to read:

At the request of counsel to Senator BILBO, the investigators' report of October 31, 1946, together with the exhibits appended thereto was made a part of the record and has been considered by the committee in arriving at the conclusions expressed in this report.

During the course of the hearings, 102 witnesses testified before the committee, 34 of whom were white and 68 colored. Eighty-four of the witnesses were volunteers or subpenaed by the committee and 18 were called at the request of Senator BILBO. All of the witnesses called at the request of Senator BILBO were white and many of them did not support his candidacy.

By way of background, it is apparent from the record that previous to the July 2 primary, Negroes have not participated in Democratic primaries in Mississippi for 56 years for the reason that the Democratic primary in Mississippi had been accepted under the law as the white man's primary by Negroes and whites. However, in April 1944, the Supreme Court, in the case of Smith v. Allwright (321 U. S. 649), invalidated a resolution of a State Democratic convention in Texas, which purported to limit the participation in the primary in that State to white citizens. The effect of this decision upon the Negro citizens of Mississippi remained largely quiescent until the spring of 1946, at which time, due to the influence and intervention of certain outside of the State organizations, attempts were made to organize the Negroes and urge them to go to the polls and participate in the July 2 Democratic primary. These attempts were further facilitated by the passage in April 1946 by the Mississippi State Legislature of an act exempting all veterans without reference to whether they were colored or white, from the payment of a poll tax for the 1944–45 period if they were in the armed services. The combination of these elements, together with agitation by certain radio commentators and correspondents from outside of the State, and the return to Mississippi of large numbers of Negro veterans, contributed to a situation which was shown by the record to have prevailed in Mississippi, in which great interest in this primary was exhibited on the part of both whites and Negroes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a question.

Mr. HATCH. No; I do not want the Senator to yield to me for a question. I really have been trying to hear what the Senator from Oklahoma is reading. Sitting even as close as I am to the Senator it is impossible, due to the confusion which exists in the Senate Chamber, to understand what the Senator is reading. May we have order, Mr. Secretary?

The SECRETARY. The Senate will please be in order. Senators wishing to converse will kindly retire to the cloak room.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Secretary, I continue to read:

Evidence presented to the committee showed that Senator BILBO felt that the combination of these outside interests and intervention in the internal affairs of the State of Mississippi was inimical to the welfare of its citizens, and in consequence of that he alined himself with the great majority of the white citizenry of Mississippi in an effort in his campaign to overcome this outside influence and to confine the results in the primary to the will of the qualified electorate of Mississippi. If Senator BILBO made extreme statements in this campaign, it is felt that these must be considered in light of this outside interference and in the heat of a campaign in which known hostility of certain elements of the press and radio, whom he was convinced were opposed to the best interests of the State of Mississippi existed, and which were openly and avowedly out to get him.

Evidence presented to the committee from both Negroes and whites was practically unanimous to the effect that it is "common knowledge" that the Democratic primary in Mississippi was confined to whites and that Negroes had theretofore never participated therein. The testimony of the principal complainant, T. B. Wilson, on this point was as follows (record, p. 21):

"Mr. WILSON. * * * We have had no opportunity to vote in the Democratic primary prior to this year, prior to the time at least that the Supreme Court decision was handed down in the Texas case, and our people were indifferent about registering all the time because of that fact. They knew that they were refused all years past and said, 'This is a white Democratic primary, and you cannot vote in it.' There are numbers, hundreds of our people, right in Hinds County, that were indifferent, were disinterested in even registering and paying a poll tax because of that fact. They said, 'What is the use of throwing away that $2 when we can't vote? There is no other place to vote in Mississippi but the Democratic primaries, only in the general elections, which don't mean anything; and since we can't vote in the primaries, I don't care to throw away my $2 poll tax.'"

Let me interpolate that Hinds County is the county in which is located the capital of Mississippi, the city of Jackson.

I continue reading from the report:

On this same subject, Rabbi Stanley R. Brav, of Vicksburg, Miss., testified as follows (record, p. 92):

"The CHAIRMAN. Well, this situation really exists throughout the State among the white people, does it not, as a whole, that is, that they don't feel that the colored people should vote in the same primary elections as they vote?

"Mr. BRAV. Well, I don't know how the folks feel throughout this State. I have heard many people say that.

"The CHAIRMAN. But it is just common knowledge that that is true, especially in the Southern States, is it not?

"Mr. BRAV. There is a good bit of feeling in that direction."

A typical Negro witness, Meredith Lewis, of McComb, Miss., testified as follows (record, p. 323):

"The CHAIRMAN. Well, is it not true that it is common knowledge in the South, particularly in Mississippi, that the white people have been trying to keep the colored people from voting in their primaries?

"Mr. LEWIS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is common knowledge, is it not?

"Mr. LEWIS. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. And is it not true that no matter who would have run, whether it was Senator Bilbo or Tom Smith or Bill Smith, the same results would have occurred, that is, that the white people as a whole would have made every effort to keep the colored people from voting in that primary?

"Mr. LEWIS. Well, I don't know, sir, because before, you see, they didn't ask all those questions.

"The CHAIRMAN. I am not talking about your registration. I am talking about the sentiment in Mississippi as to the white people trying to maintain the primary ballot for themselves and not let the colored people participate in it. Is it not true that that condition has prevailed?

"Mr. LEWIS. Yes, sir; it has prevailed."

The testimony of the election officials who were heard before the committee, specifically the circuit clerks, in whose hands under the Mississippi law lay the responsibility for administration of the electoral machinery as applied to voters, uniformly testified that the discrimination against the Negro, if any, which they practiced, came from their deep-seated traditional conviction that the Negro has no place in the Democratic primary and that nothing that they did was attributable in any manner to the speeches or statements of Senator BILBO in his campaign. The testimony of Clifford R. Field, of Natchez, Miss., was very clear on this point (record, p. 430):

"The CHAIRMAN. Well, to be truthful about it, you made it a little harder for the colored to register than the whites, isn't that true?

"Mr. FIELD. That is right.

"The CHAIRMAN. Isn't it a fact that it is common knowledge throughout the State of Mississippi—in fact, throughout the South—that the white people have been striving to keep the primary elections to themselves without interference by the colored people?

"Mr. FIELD. I think so; yes, sir. I think it is common knowledge, and I just believe it is.

"The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, isn't it that which prompted you to take the steps you did?

"Mr. FIELD. I expect that is right."

"Did you hear or read about any statements that were made by Senator BILBO during his campaign speeches respecting the fact that he didn't want the colored people to vote? You heard many of these statements?

"Mr. FIELD. Yes, sir; I heard them. I heard the ones over the radio.

"The CHAIRMAN. Can you tell the committee what it is that you heard?

"Mr. FIELD. Just about what they said here this morning, that he was advising them—I don't remember just how it was put now. I would hate to make a mistake about it.

"The CHAIRMAN. What effect, if any, did his statements have in causing you not to register colored people, or giving a lesser chance to the colored to register than the whites?

"Mr. FIELD. It didn't change me one bit.

"The CHAIRMAN. In other words, irrespective of what Senator BILBO said, you would have followed the same course as you did?

"Mr. FIELD. Yes, sir; because as you brought out there a little while ago, it is generally accepted in Mississippi that the white primary is for the white people.

"The CHAIRMAN. And that is the reason why you took the steps that you did, and you were not at all influenced by Senator BILBO's statements?

"Mr. FIELD. That is right."

Wendell R. Holmes, circuit clerk in Magnolia, Miss., testified on this point as follows (record, p. 389):

"The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a fact that it is almost common knowledge in the State of Mississippi, and in many of the Southern States, that the white people have consistently attempted to prevent colored people from voting in the primary elections?

"Mr. HOLMES. That is correct.

"The CHAIRMAN. And with that knowledge on your part, don't you think that whether or not Senator BILBO had been the candidate, or anybody else, that the white people would have taken the same position?

"Mr. HOLMES. Regardless of who was running.

"The CHAIRMAN. What effect do you think the statements attributed to Senator BILBO had?

"Mr. HOLMES. None whatever, none at all.

"The CHAIRMAN. What effect did they have on you in attempting to discourage registration of colored people?

"Mr. HOLMES. None at all. I followed the custom that had been in existence from the time I started in the circuit clerk's office in 1932, and his speeches didn't have any effect at all on me."

Bearing on the custom and tradition as existing in the State of Mississippi, the record indicates that but an extremely small portion of the white and colored of the State population are not native-born (about three-tenths of 1 percent) and from that it follows that the custom and tradition with regard to white Democratic primaries is inbred and ingrained into the great majority of Mississippi citizenry. A majority of the committee are of the opinion that the record clearly shows that irrespective of what Senator BILBO actually said in his campaign oratory, the disqualification of and prevention of the Negro from registering or voting would have been the same, since that is uniformly the attitude of the native white Mississippi citizenry.

Two statements which Senator BILBO was alleged to have made in the course of his campaign were (exhibit 1):

"(1) 'I call on every red-blooded white man to use any means to keep the niggers away from the polls. If you don't understand what that means you are just plain dumb.'

"(2) '* * * I'm calling on every red-blooded American who believes in the superiority and integrity of the white race to get out and see that no nigger votes. * * * And the best time to do it is the night before.'"

Witness after witness was questioned about these statements and as to their intended effect and actual effect upon the electorate and upon election officials. Senator BILBO was asked to explain these alleged statements. He admitted to frequent repetition of the phrase about "seeing them the night before the election" but denied that he intended that those following his admonitions give other than friendly advice to Negroes the night before the election. It is significant that not one witness testified that he had been "seen the night before the election" nor was there any evidence of any violence connected with "seeing Negroes the night before the election." On the record we can only conclude that Senator BILBO's intention as well as the effect of his words was the giving of friendly advice to Negroes.

As to the allegation that Senator BILBO urged use of "any means" to prevent Negroes from voting, Senator BILBO categorically denied ever making such a statement. At the hearing he insisted he always used the adjective "lawful" means. In the transcript of the radio speech which he made the night before the election, he used the adjective "lawful." Several witnesses who heard Senator BILBO's speeches also recollected that he used the adjective "lawful." On the record of conflicting accounts, the majority conclude that he used the word "lawful" and that if on some occasions he neglected to use the adjective as alleged by some witnesses, it was due to a slip of the tongue. This conclusion is further supported by a report of an interview between Senator BILBO and some reporters of the press as included in the record, page 787, which interview occurred on August 9, 1946, and in which Senator BILBO spoke of this point as follows:

"SPIVAK. Do you believe, when you speak as you did in your primary, you are upholding the fifteenth amendment?

"BILBO. I certainly was. There was nothing in violation of that provision of the Constitution in anything that I said; and I said further that it was the duty of every white Democrat in Mississippi to resort to every means within the law to keep the Negro from voting in our primary, because they were not qualified to vote."

While the record shows that in some respects Senator BILBO's campaign oratory was crude and in poor taste as viewed by some, it is our opinion that these statements cannot and should not be reasonably construed as indicative of moral turpitude or as unconstitutional and illegal. Mississippi politics have always been heated, and the type of campaign oratory used by Senator BILBO conforms to the custom prevalent in Mississippi for many years and to the wishes of the white citizenry of Mississippi regarding their candidate's position as evdenced by the returns in the primary, in which Senator BILBO led his nearest opponent by nearly 40,000 votes. We consider it a highly dangerous precedent for the Senate of the United States to criticize one of its Members for conforming to the pattern desired by the electorate in his particular State, in order to obtain the nomination, merely for the reason that that pattern may not happen to be that espoused in many of the other States.

The testimony of two of the so-called leaders of the Negroes in Mississippi, T. B. Wilson, president of the Mississippi Progressive Voters' League, and Percy Green, editor of the State's leading Negro newspaper, the Jackson Advocate, showed that they did all that they could to get the Negroes to come to the polls and yet that in Hinds County, in spite of their efforts, only 414 out of 55,000 registered and only 195 out of the 414 voted. The record shows further that there was no trouble in Hinds County in Negroes registering or voting, and that in spite of that fact and the efforts of these leaders, a very small number of Negroes even went so far as to register to vote. Percy Green testified to an editorial carried on the front page of his paper and in the New Orleans Times Picayune and the Memphis Commercial Appeal, which invited and requested the Negroes to put down all show of force and arms and go to the polls and vote; and yet, in spite of that fact and the fact that no one in Hinds County was seen the night before or otherwise troubled, very few Negroes showed enough interest to even make the attempt to register to vote. T. B. Wilson's testimony in this respect was as follows (record, p. 13):

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of any duly qualified elector in Hinds County who presented himself to vote on July 2 and who was refused the right to vote?

"Mr. WILSON. I don't know. I don't recall anybody who was refused the right to vote, only those challenges.

"The CHAIRMAN. So that, so far as you know, all of the colored people in Hinds County who were duly qualified and who presented themselves to vote, did vote?

"Mr. WILSON. Did vote; that is right."

Wilson testified that while the ground work for the complaint upon which the investigation was based was initiated by the Progressive Voters' League, that the complaint itself was prepared by a lawyer for the Civil Rights Congress of New York and that assistance in preparing the complaint was furnished by the Civil Rights Congress.

Senator BILBO consistently maintained before the committee that under the law of Mississippi the Democratic primary was confined to whites. He pointed out that in 1890 the Mississippi Constitution was amended to provide for an educational qualification in connection with registration which had proved to be a stumbling block to the Negroes' efforts to register for more than 50 years. He explained that even if registered, he believed that under the law (sec. 3129 of the Mississippi Code) the Negroes as a group were incapable of bona fide intending to support the party nominee and of showing the election officials in their respective cases that they had been in accord with the party holding the primary within the two preceding years. Section 3129 of the Mississippi Code provides:

"No person shall be eligible to participate in any primary election unless he intends to support the nominations in which he participates, has been in accord with the party holding such primary within the two preceding years, and is not excluded from such primary by any regulation of the State executive committee of the party holding such primary."

Bearing upon this point, the majority of the committee is of the opinion that the Supreme Court decision in the case of Smith v. Allwright does not of itself invalidate Mississippi statutes until they are specifically at issue before the Supreme Court in appropriate proceedings, and that under section 3129 of the Mississippi Code it was open to Senator BILBO to maintain, and to the election officials in Mississippi to sustain, this statute by administratively interpreting it to constitute the primary confined to whites. This appears to us to be sound for two reasons: (1) That the inconsistency and hence improbability of the would-be Negro voter affirming his intention to support the party's nominee in the case of a party openly advocating white supremacy is apparent; (2) that in the case of established affiliation with the party holding the primary within the two preceding years, it is administratively feasible that the burden of proof in that regard be upon the voter, and unless he is able to prove to the election officials that he has been in accord with the party holding the primary within the two preceding years, his vote can be rejected. On this basis we feel that custom and tradition are entitled to consideration in interpreting the meaning of the words used in the statute; and in light of this custom and tradition showing that election officials had for many years confined the primary to whites, we feel we cannot say that under the law of Mississippi it is not a white primary, and from this we cannot condemn Senator BILBO for having in his campaign endeavored to protect what he felt to be the true meaning of the law of Mississippi.

Many Negroes testified as to fear of registering or voting, and associated this by opinions only with statements alleged to have been made by Senator BILBO during the course of his campaign. On this record we are unable to conclude that the failure of Negroes to participate was due to remarks made by Senator BILBO. Such a conclusion would be a mere speculation. In our opinion there are many other factors, such as (1) general belief among the white population and election officials (irrespective of statements made by Senator BILBO) that the primary was exclusively for whites; (2) Negroes, being probable Republicans, did not, therefore, qualify to participate in the Democratic primary; and (3) failure to participate was at least in part due to the lethargy of a group which had had little political experience hitherto. The record shows further that Perry Howard, Negro national Republican committeeman from Mississippi, in an article published in Mississippi papers 2 or 3 days before the primary, urged Negroes not to go to the polls on July 2 but to be prepared to remain qualified as Republicans and to go in 1948 to elect a Republican President.

I now quote from the statement just alluded to:

"PERRY HOWARD STATEMENT REDUCED NEGRO VOTE

"A statement attributed to Perry Howard, Negro national Republican committeeman from Mississippi, appearing in a local daily some 2 or 3 days before election day, is charged with having greatly reduced the number of Negro voters in the July 2 Democratic primary, in which Negroes voted for the first time in 70 years.

"The Howard statement urged Negroes not to go to the polls on July 2 but to be prepared to go to the polls in 1948 to elect a Republican President of the United States.

"Already fearful and apprehensive, many Negroes made the Howard statement their excuse and stayed away from the polls on election day."

Witnesses called by Senator BILBO uniformly testified that in their opinion Senator BILBO in his campaign had nothing to do with any difficulties that the Negroes may have had in the July 2 primary; but that, on the contrary, Senator BILBO had been earnest in his efforts in Mississippi to maintain peaceful relations and to protect the Negro citizens of the State of Mississippi. Many of these witnesses were not supporters of Senator BILBO and were not in agreement with him on political issues. Yet, in spite of that fact, their testimony was very clear in developing the point that what happened in the Mississippi primary happened because of traditional antipathy to the Negro voting in the Democratic primary on the part of the whites and not because of anything Senator BILBO might have said in his campaign for nomination.

We further note that the record shows and that several witnesses testified that the July 2 primary, while a tense election, was very peaceful, there was very little violence (but 5 cases were discovered by the committee's investigators in 22 counties, and that in none of these cases was Senator BILBO, or any of his statements responsible on the basis of any evidence submitted to the committee). Several of the violence cases were shown not to have been connected with the election but to have exemplified the usual difficulties attendant on an election day whether in Mississippi or any other State.

CONCLUSION

The majority of the committee feel that there is no evidence in the record connecting Senator BILBO with any illegality or impropriety other than perhaps in certain cases departure from ordinarily accepted good taste as some view it or with any of the alleged discrimination or denial to the Negro in Mississippi of the right to register or vote. We are of the opinion that the record demonstrates conclusively that any difficulties experienced by the Negro in his attempts to register and vote in the July 2 primary in Mississippi resulted from the traditional feeling between whites and Negroes and their ideas of the law in that State as regards participation by Negroes in Democratic primaries, and it would have been the same irrespective of who the candidates might have been. And we further feel that nothing that Senator BILBO actually said was responsible in any way for any illegality shown in the evidence presented to the committee to have taken place in the Mississippi registration or voting.

We find that the law in Mississippi, as administratively and traditionally interpreted by the local election officials, constituted a white primary and that Senator BILBO, in realization and understanding of this fact, did nothing further than earnestly and sincerely seek to uphold Mississippi law, custom, and tradition. Considerable of the more vituperative remarks uttered by Senator BILBO in his campaign we deem to be justifiably directed at the attempted and unwarranted interference with the internal affairs of the State of Mississippi by outside agitators, seeking not to benefit the Negroes but merely to further their own selfish political ends.

RECOMMENDATION

The majority of the committee do find that THEODORE G. BILBO, duly accredited Senator-elect from the State of Mississippi, is entitled to his seat in the Senate from the State of Mississippi; that his renomination and reelection was proper and legal and expresses the will of the qualified electorate of the State of Mississippi; and we do recommend that Senator-elect THEODORE G. BILBO be seated in the Eighteenth Congress of the United States.

This report is signed by the chairman of the committee, ALLEN J. ELLENDER, by myself, and by Senator BURNET R. MAYBANK, of South Carolina.

Mr. Secretary, I am advised that it is the desire to take a recess, and if that is so, I shall yield the floor for that purpose.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives had assembled; that Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, had been elected Speaker, and that John Andrews, a citizen of the State of Massachusetts, had been elected Clerk of the House of the Eightieth Congress.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 1) providing for a joint session of the two Houses in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on Monday, January 6, 1947, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President may be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DEATH OF SENATOR ANDREWS, OF FLORIDA

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary, I understand the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] have resolutions they desire to present.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Secretary, I am willing to defer offering the resolution until a later time, if it is not in accord with the rule. I desire to make some comment about the death of my late colleague and to offer a resolution. Does the Senator from Maine desire that I wait until a little later?

Mr. WHITE. I think this is an appropriate time, if a resolution is to be offered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Secretary, on the 18th of September last the then senior Senator from Florida, Hon. CHARLES O. ANDREWS, passed away. In his passing the Senate lost one of its most faithful, dutiful, and beloved Members, the State of Florida its senior Senator, and America a great Senator and citizen.

Senator ANDREWS, in his 69 years, had had a rare career of honor in his native State of Florida. He was born in Florida, like his ancestors ahead of him for over a century. He was educated in the Florida public schools, and held diplomas from the Florida Normal School and the University of Florida.

He was a captain in the Florida National Guard, and, ever a patriot, indicated his patriotism further by volunteering for Spanish-American War service and by applying for service in World War I.

As a young man, Senator ANDREWS was secretary of the Florida State Senate. Afterward he took up the career of the practice of law in the State and Federal courts.

His first judicial honor came in his own native section of Florida when he was judge of the criminal court in west Florida, in Walton County, in 1910 and 1911. Thereafter he moved into the executive branch of the government, and became assistant attorney general of Florida, a position which he held for 7 years, from 1912 to 1919.

Senator ANDREWS then became a circuit judge of Florida, and, I may add, by the unanimous expression of the bar of another section of the State from that in which he was living, because of the distinguished service he had rendered his State in 7 years as assistant attorney general.

In 1929 he was chosen a commissioner of the Florida State Supreme Court, and served until 1932. That choice was not a political choice, but the recognition of Senator ANDREWS' judicial excellence by the Supreme Court of Florida itself. It was a time when the legal docket of that court was in arrears, when the court was authorized by the legislature to select three of the outstanding members of the Florida bar who would be willing patriotically to give their services to the assistance of the highest court. The court fittingly called upon Senator CHARLES O. ANDREWS, and he rendered further distinguished service upon the circuit court of the State.

Senator ANDREWS was president of the Florida State Bar Association in the years 1921 and 1922, and was also a member of the American, Florida State, and Orange County bar associations. In 1927 he was a member of the State House of Representatives from Orange County.

He was a member of the Rotary Club, of the Masonic fraternity, of the University of Florida Alumni Association, the Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity, and of the legal fraternity, Phi Delta Phi.

Senator ANDREWS was elected, as was I, on the 3d of November 1936, to the United States Senate, and became immediately Florida's senior Senator. I believe I can say without contradiction that in the 10 years of Senator ANDREWS' service in this body there was no Member looked upon with greater tenderness, none respected more, none loved better, or regarded with warmer esteem, than the senior Senator from Florida, of whom I have the honor to speak.

Senator ANDREWS was a kindly man—firm and brave in his convictions—but gentle in his touch, always thoughtful and considerate of other people in all walks of life.

So, Mr. Secretary, our former beloved colleague came to the end of his career after having served with distinction in the three principal departments of the Government, in the executive, the legislative, and the judicial departments of his State or the National Government.

His career was crowned with a happy personal life. With his devoted and ever-gracious wife he saw his children grow up to recognition and distinction around him. He enjoyed their fellowship and their family association. And when finally the end itself came to him, the finger of death touched his brow only gently, and he slept away in the early hours of the morning of the 18th of September 1946.

Mr. Secretary, I know that our hearts are heavy, but that we are sustained by the sweet memories of Senator ANDREWS' noble and generous life, and that our prayers, our sympathy and understanding go out to his mourning family and his bereaved people.

Now, Mr. Secretary, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution pertaining to Senator ANDREWS, which I send to the desk.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, is this a resolution to recess?

Mr. PEPPER. Oh, no; it is a resolution announcing to the Senate of the death of Senator ANDREWS, and informing the House of Representatives.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 2) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. CHARLES O. ANDREWS, late a Senator from the State of Florida.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Secretary, I believe it would be appropriate for me at the conclusion of other matters which may be brought up to move that the Senate recess out of respect to the memory of Senator ANDREWS.

DEATH OF SENATOR BAILEY, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, it becomes my painful duty to advise the Senate of the death of my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from North Carolina, JOSIAH WILLIAM BAILEY, which occurred at his home in Raleigh, N. C., on Sunday morning, December 15, 1946. Senator BAILEY had been ill for several months, but his health had greatly improved in recent weeks and he was preparing to resume his duties in the Senate upon the assembling of the Eightieth Congress. The summons came suddenly, but found him ready. He was 73 years of age.

For 16 years Senator BAILEY represented North Carolina in this body, and served the people of his State and the Nation with singular devotion to the public interest and with credit and distinction to himself. There was never any question as to where he stood upon any public matter. He never dodged and he never ducked. No matter how hot the issue or how controversial the cause, he met it squarely and faced it unafraid. The record of his service here sustains the best traditions of the Senate and adds lustre to the annals of this historic Chamber.

Senator BAILEY possessed many attributes of greatness. He was able, resourceful, versatile, courageous, and loyal.

In his young manhood he achieved great distinction as editor of the Biblical Recorder, the organ of the Baptist denomination in North Carolina; later he became a brilliant lawyer and established a lucrative practice. In a public capacity he served as United States Collector of Internal Revenue for the Eastern District of North Carolina and became an outstanding political leader. For nearly a half century he was the masterful advocate of many humanitarian, educational, political, and religious causes and was an orator of superior gifts and graces and a speaker of rare force and effectiveness. He was elected to the Senate in 1931, and through the intervening years was an active participant in the Senate debates, and exerted wide influence in shaping legislation, having served for several years as chairman of the important Commerce Committee, and rendered effective service on various other Senate committees. He was a resourceful leader in many Senate fights, and made many memorable addresses upon vitally important matters pending in the Senate. His masterful argument against the measure to reorganize the Supreme Court was accounted one of the great addresses made in this body during this century.

Senator BAILEY was loyal to the very core of his being. Loyal to his friends, loyal to his family, loyal to his church, loyal to his State and country, and loyal to his God. And he believed in a great God. He would not worship at the shrine of a small deity—he would bow before no little god. His God was omnipotent, having all power, omniscient, knowing all things, and omnipresent, being everywhere, and able to bless and save to the uttermost.

Having known Senator BAILEY it is easier to read with understanding and faith the majestic first chapter of Genesis as it unfolds in stately passages the successive stages of creation, culminating in the making of man in the image of God, and stamping him with His own divine personality and giving him dominion over all created things.

Thomas Carlyle in writing of Robert Burns gave this standard by which a man might be appraised: "What the man did to the world and what the world did to the man." Senator BAILEY gave to the world an example of exalted living, of unselfish public service, of courage and daring, of faith and vision. The world responded by honoring him with high public position, according him universal respect and esteem, and crowning him with the plaudits of his beloved fellow citizens of the commonwealth he served so well. The world could not break his spirit nor shatter his faith.

When General Lafayette visited Washington after we had won the War of the Revolution, Chief Pushmatahaw, a famous Indian warrior, and the man described by Gen. Andrew Jackson as "the greatest and bravest Indian I ever knew," journeyed from his far-western nation to Washington to visit General Lafayette, and while in this Capital City, fell desperately ill. This beloved Indian chief, realizing his serious condition and that his death was imminent, called to his bedside his tribesmen and said to them: "When you return to our nation the braves will ask you, where is Chief Pushmatahaw, and you will say: 'He is no more.' And the news of his passing will be as the noise of the falling of a mighty oak in the stillness of the forest."

On April 9, 1946, in his office in this Capitol, Senator BAILEY was stricken, but after weeks of illness he recovered sufficiently to return to his beloved North Carolina, and under her inviting skies he had greatly improved and had completed all of his plans to return to Washington and to the Senate for the opening session of this Congress, but on December 14, 1946, he suffered another attack and he died on the following day. The news of his passing was as the noise of the falling of a mighty oak in the stillness of the forest in the great Commonwealth of North Carolina, that gave him birth and nourished, honored, and loved him until the end. The whole State mourns his death.

In the power of immortal verse Wordsworth fittingly describes Senator BAILEY in these lines from the Happy Warrior:

'Tis he whose law is reason; who depends
Upon that law as on the best of friends;
Whence, in a state where men are tempted still
To evil for a guard against worse ill,
And what in quality or act is best
Doth seldom on a right foundation rest.
He labors good on good to fix, and owes
To virtue every triumph that he knows:

Who, if he rise to station of command,
Rises by open means; and there will stand
On honorable terms, or else retire,
And in himself possess his own desire:

Who comprehends his trust, and to the same
Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim;
And therefore does not stoop, nor lie in wait
For wealth, or honors, or for worldly state;
Whom they must follow; on whose head must fall,
Like showers of manna, if they come at all:

Whose powers shed round him in the common strife,
Or mild concerns of ordinary life,
A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
But who, if he be called upon to face
Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined Great issues, good or bad, for humankind,
Is happy as a lover; and attired
With sudden brightness like a man inspired;
And, through the heat of conflict, keeps the law
In calmness made, and sees what he foresaw;
Or if an unexpected call succeed,
Come when it will, is equal to the need:

He who, though thus endued as with a sense
And faculty for storm and turbulence,
Is yet a soul whose master-bias leans
To home-felt pleasures and to gentle scenes;
Sweet images! which, wheresoe'er he be,
Are at his heart; and such fidelity
It is his darling passion to approve;
More brave for this, that he hath much to love:

* * * * *

Who, whether praise of him must walk the earth
Forever, and to noble deeds give birth,
Or he must fall, to sleep without his fame,
And leave a dead, unprofitable name,
Finds comfort in himself and in his cause;
And, while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
His breath in confidence of Heaven's applause:
This is the happy warrior; this is he
That every man in arms should wish to be.

Our beloved and departed colleague so lived that he could with Byron tell "Death, that omnipotent tyrant, to his everlasting face, that he possesses no sting, and challenge his sleepless handmaiden the grave, to dare proclaim a victory."

Mr. Secretary, I send forward a resolution, and ask for its adoption.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will read.

The resolution (S. Res. 3) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY, late a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. WHITE's motion that the oath of office be administered to the Senator-elect from Maine, Mr. BREWSTER.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, I inquire if the Senator from Maine is about to make a motion?

Mr. WHITE. I was about to make a motion to recess.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me that under the circumstances now existing the only thing, so far as those who wish to organize the Senate without Mr. BILBO are concerned, is to recess at this time until tomorrow and have a session tomorrow afternoon. If by that time those who are blocking the organization of the Senate have not changed their minds, I think we should meet Monday morning, Monday afternoon, Monday evening, and continuously next week until this question is settled.

Resort to a filibuster in such an important matter, for such a wholly inconsequential purpose, namely, to prevent the temporary postponement of this question until the Senate can organize itself, is so unjustifiable that it seems to me that if those who are conducting the filibuster, who are preventing the swearing in of 35 Senators from other States, are not willing to change their minds, they are going to face a complete change in the rules of the Senate. They are going to face a change which will bring about a majority cloture on all questions, and I think that will have the full support of the country.

We have shown today that two-thirds of the Senate desire that the Senate be organized without Mr. BILBO, and that the question of his prima facie right to a seat be considered immediately after that organization; yet, in spite of that, a few desire to thwart the will of the entire Senate.

We cannot begin a session subject to that kind of threat for all measures that we may propose, and I believe very strongly that the only course for us to pursue is to see this thing through. I think Senators ought to have an opportunity to think it over for a day or two. Incidentally, the end of the week is not a good time in which to break a filibuster by simply staying in session. I hope the majority of the Senate will agree that beginning Monday morning the Senate should remain in session until the Senate is organized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, I had in mind to make some comment on the pending situation. I desire to emphasize the fact that I am not only not participating in any filibuster, but that I distinctly disapprove of filibusters generally. I have never participated in one. And while I cannot predict what action I might take over the long future during which I expect to remain a Member of this body, I have never sympathized with filibusters, and do not now sympathize with them, and if this is one that we are entering into I do not sympathize with it and will not participate in it.

I recognize the constitutional right of any State to be represented in the Senate by a full representation. I recognize the constitutional right of any Senator who has been chosen by a State to present his credentials to the Senate as a preliminary to his admission to the body. But there is an equal if not a paramount right, in my judgment, in the Senate itself, under the Constitution, to determine whether any man shall enter the Senate or whether he shall remain here after he has entered it, and if I were called on at this moment to express my opinion as to which of those constitutional rights is paramount to the other I would say that the right of the Senate itself, representing the whole country, under the Constitution, to determine the qualifications of a Senator is paramount to the right of any man to claim admission to the Senate if question is raised as to his qualifications.

I deplore anything that lowers the estimate of the American people of the Senate of the United States. We frequently refer to the Senate as the last palladium of our liberties and of public discussion, the forum of free speech. We are in a critical juncture in the history of our country and in the history of the world. I do not believe the American people are in a mood to condone any form of frivolity in the Senate, any resort to technicalities on either side that would thwart their will, or present the Senate of the United States in a ridiculous attitude before the people. I am very profound in that conviction, regardless of the politics of the situation, and I am convinced in my own mind that there ought not to be any partisanship in this body in determining whether a man is qualified for admission into the Senate. In this particular situation I doubt whether either political party can gain any political advantage out of it, no matter what may happen.

Therefore, I have regretted and deplored, and now regret and deplore, any effort on the part of anyone here to obtain any partisan advantage out of this situation, if there is any such motive in the mind of any Senator, and I do not accuse any Senator of having such a motive. The questions involved are far above partisanship. They are far above political considerations. They involve the integrity of the United States Senate. They involve the integrity of the legislative process. They involve the estimate of the world of ourselves as a legislative body, and involve not only our standing among our people, but world opinion respecting the validity of our action, as I see it. It is for that reason that at this juncture, as we are about to recess, I raise my voice against any effort to obtain temporary or permanent partisan political advantage.

I have not announced how I am going to vote on the right of the Senator from Mississippi to be seated. I have stated that I felt that Senators ought to have an opportunity to read the hearings, embracing some 700 pages, which have just been printed today and have been laid on our desks. I spent a considerable portion of last night reading the report of the Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program, which had just been made available yesterday. I want to read the evidence. I want to be fair to the Senator from Mississippi and fair to the Senate and fair to the country and to the State of Mississippi in determining how I shall vote. Whatever my ultimate determination may be—I am speaking now as an individual Senator and not as occupying any position of honor or trust here—whatever my ultimate vote may be, I shall be willing to abide the political or other consequences which ensue by reason of that vote, and if I were not willing to do so I ought not to be sitting here myself.

I hope that Senators on both sides of the Chamber will divest themselves of anything that is petty or that gives the appearance of being petty, either from a political or personal standpoint, in determining the right of the Senator-elect from Mississippi, the right of the State of Mississippi, and the right of the United States and of the people of the United States, to have this question passed upon on its merits.

I hope I can divest myself of any prejudice or of any personal favoritism of any kind or description. I hope that we may be able to devise some process by which the Senate can preserve itself from the contempt and condemnation of the American people if we are required to spend a week here or longer in determining whether the Senate of the United States as a whole shall be able to function, or whether our entire legislative process shall be held at naught and nullified while determining whether one man shall be allowed to sit in the Senate.

I hope that we may think this matter over seriously and solemnly. It is a solemn moment in the history of the United States. I hope that after the recess until tomorrow we may come back here prepared to do whatever big thing is necessary in order that the Senate may extricate itself from an unhappy situation, but at the same time preserve all the rights guaranteed under the Constitution to the Senate itself and to the State involved in this controversy.

Mr. Secretary, I felt that I ought to make these remarks, which are wholly nonpartisan, and having been the victim of a great many filibusters heretofore in the Senate against legislation which I favored, I might say to the Senator from Ohio that, as he may recall, I have from time to time advocated that the Senate be permitted to decide by a majority vote what its rules should be, and should be permitted to decide the condition under which it might arrive at a point where a vote could be taken on any pending legislation. When I am confronted with that proposition in the way of an amendment to the rules I am quite sure my vote will not be inconsistent with the attitude which I have always assumed here with regard to the right of the Senate to govern itself by a majority vote.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. May I just say a brief word first?

Mr. Secretary, it is but a few moments ago that we heard two memorial addresses in honor of former Members of the Senate who brought to us during their long service distinction and honor.

I would much like to have this session close in the mood and in the spirit and in the terms of memorial rather than in words of controversy, and unless the Senator insists on it I should like now in that spirit to move that the Senate recess.

Mr. MAYBANK. I gladly yield to the distinguished Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the two deceased Senators, I move that the Senate now stand in recess——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator withhold his motion for a minute or two? I should like to make a brief comment on the motion.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield for one statement?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I was so greatly impressed with the statements of the distinguished future majority leader and my good minority leader that there is little that I can add, except this: I went to Mississippi, not at my request, but because I was appointed as a member of the committee. At the proper time I desire to lay before the Senate what I believe to be the facts which the distinguished chairman of our committee, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] presented to the public of the United States last week.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I very much appreciate the courtesy of the Senator, because, as I understand the rules, his motion to recess would not be debatable and hence I would not have the privilege of making a very brief comment on the motion except for his courtesy in withholding the motion for a moment.

Speaking for myself, my comment is this: I think the greatest respect we could pay to the memory of the two distinguished Senators who have been called from us by death since we last met would be for the Senate to remain in session for as many hours and days as necessary to reestablish the integrity of the Senate in the esteem of American public opinion. I think we have made a sorry spectacle here today. Again, we have seen a demonstration of rule by minority, preventing putting into effect the majority wish of the Senate. Once again we have seen used a type of dilatory tactics which defeats the will of the Senate, against which tactics I spoke on more than one occasion during the Seventy-ninth Congress. I serve notice that in this session of Congress I shall continue to fight the filibuster technique. To that end I have on my desk a resolution which seeks to modify and amend both rule III and rule XXII of the Senate.

Let me say to the majority leader that in my judgment until those rules are amended in a manner that will make it impossible to conduct a filibuster against the wishes of a majority in the Senate, democratic government in America will be imperiled. I think this body has today made it perfectly clear that such a danger exists. As one Member of the Senate I shall continue to press for the establishment of rules of the Senate which will prevent rule by minority, which once again today has prevailed in the Senate. It is a deplorable situation which will be aided if the motion to recess is agreed to.

Let me say for the RECORD that I shall vote against the motion to recess, because I do not believe that a motion to recess at this time is the appropriate way under the circumstances of paying proper respect to the two Senators who have passed away since we last met. Let us first have an organized Senate before we recess in solemn respect for the memory of our deceased brethren.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. I fail to understand why two speeches on this subject should give rise to all the commotion which has been caused in the Senate. In part, I fail to understand why they should have provoked threats on the part of the Senator from Ohio to put the minority in a strait-jacket by adopting new rules in reference to filibusters.

What has been presented here is a challenge to the right of a State to send to the Senate a Senator of its own choice, elected in a campaign in which all the charges which have now been presented in the report made by the Committee To Investigate War Contracts have been brought. Those charges were made and thoroughly aired, and the people of the State of Mississippi repudiated them and sent Senator BILBO here to represent them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I do not have the floor. Let me complete one thought.

When this representative of the State of Mississippi came to the door of the Senate, speeches were made by two Senators who believe in the Constitution of the United States and in the rights of the sovereign States. They do not believe, as has been suggested by our minority leader, that the rights of the sovereign States can be overridden by the United States Senate. I am not one who subscribes to such a theory as that. I come from a State which has always stood for States' rights. I stand now, as I have always stood, for the rights of the sovereign States of the Union, and particularly their right to send to the Senate representatives of their own choice, subject to the constitutional provisions as to qualifications and expulsion. But because two speeches are made against an attack, made not by us but by those who are opposed to the Senator-elect from Mississippi, we are charged with filibustering and not paying proper respect to the two Senators who have passed to the Great Beyond.

Mr. Secretary, if those two Senators were present today they would stand side by side with JOHN OVERTON, ELMER THOMAS, and WALTER GEORGE, who have spoken on this subject; and their voices would not be feeble.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Secretary, what impressed me about the threat of the Senator from Ohio was the fact that the first speech which was made was a speech of great length delivered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], who is the left-wing leader of the oust-Bilbo forces. He occupied considerable time reading a long prepared speech. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who represents the right wing of that body, made a speech which occupied a considerable time. He held the floor for some time. Yet those on the other side take the position that no Senator who feels differently about the question has the right even so much as to open his mouth.

As I have said, the first speech that was made was a speech at great length by the Senator from Idaho. Then another speech was made, and the Senator from Ohio took the floor and made a speech. Then when the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who happen not to agree with the position of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Ohio, presume to speak, it is immediately charged that there is a filibuster. They are guilty of lèse-majesté. They have expressed a different opinion from that held by the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Ohio. The statement will go out all over the country that there has been a great wicked filibuster in the Senate. I have not been in the Chamber all day, but during the time I have been present as much time was taken by the two Senators who are opposing BILBO as was taken by those who undertook to support him.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. In the first place, on my time the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] spoke longer than I spoke.

Mr. RUSSELL. Unfortunately I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. He made a very interesting speech; and I believe the Senate thought that the debate was ample.

The question of a filibuster arises because of the fact that the question of Senator BILBO was, by a vote of the Senate, put over until Monday. Now, with wholly irrelevant talk, Senators are objecting to the swearing in of the next Senator on the list, and all other Senators, because the Senate has decided some question with respect to BILBO in a way which certain Senators do not like. That is the filibuster. The whole argument of the Senator from Oklahoma was entirely irrelevant to the issue. The issue was whether the Senator-elect from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the other 35 Senators-elect, who are ready to be sworn in, should be sworn. In order to prevent that course, an obvious filibuster is now being conducted. The Senator from Oklahoma began by asking that the entire report of his committee be read by the clerk, after having had the resolution read. He then discussed the Bilbo case at length, which the Senate had already settled, simply in order to delay and prevent the organization of the Senate. If that is not a filibuster, I do not know what a filibuster is.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to know at what juncture of the proceedings the Bilbo matter was put over until Monday. I have been present in the Chamber every time there has been a quorum call or a vote; and if there has been any formal action of the Senate putting the Bilbo matter over until Monday, it was while I was absent from the Chamber. I regret that I had a luncheon engagement and did not hear the remarks of the Senator from Ohio. He is always edifying whether I agree with him or not. I should have liked to have heard him. However, I think it is certainly unfair to make a charge and a threat of this nature, in view of the fact that practically as much time was taken by those who presented the case of the "anti-Bilboites" as was taken by those who are "pro-Bilbo."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. I inquire whether any decision has been reached in reference to the Bilbo case, either to carry it over until Monday, or to permit him to take the oath?

Mr. RUSSELL. The decision was in the mind of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. After certain motions and resolutions had been tabled, it was moved that the Senator-elect from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] be permitted to take the oath. That is now the pending question. We have proceeded with debate on that motion. There has been no formal motion that the Bilbo matter be postponed until Monday.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary, as I understand the situation, it is this: I made a motion providing for the swearing in of the Senator-elect from Maine. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the motion, substituting the name of Mr. BILBO for the name of Mr. BREWSTER. That amendment was laid on the table. What is now left is the original motion that I made, that Mr. BREWSTER be permitted to take the oath.

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct; but there has been no decision of the Senate that BILBO cannot be sworn in; and there is no resolution to postpone the case until next Monday. That may have originated in the mind of the Senator from Ohio. He said he wanted it done; but he is not the whole Senate, whatever he may be in the near future.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary——

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from Louisiana made a motion that Senator BILBO be permitted to take the oath. I moved to lay that motion on the table, and I explained that it was not intended to be a permanent disposition of the question, but merely a postponement of it until the Senate chose to take it from the table. I stated that I myself would move to take it from the table on Monday after the President's speech. On the basis of that statement the Senate voted by a two-thirds vote to lay the Bilbo matter on the table—to lay BILBO on the table, one might say—until the Senate was organized. That was the purpose of the motion. It was so understood; and on that basis there was approximately a two-thirds vote. When we came to the question of the organization of the Senate by swearing in other Senators, a filibuster was undertaken to prevent the swearing in of the other Senators and the organization of the Senate. It was perfectly obvious that that was its purpose.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. TAFT. The purpose was not to discuss the question of whether Senator-elect BREWSTER should be sworn, not to discuss the question as to the other Senators, but to try to protest against the action already taken by the Senate in postponing the swearing in of Senator BILBO.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. Secretary——

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator from Maine yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WHITE. I rose to make the motion that the Senate take a recess. I now move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary——

The SECRETARY. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. HATCH, Mr. MAYBANK, and Mr. MORSE addressed the Chair.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. I merely rose to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Chair announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HATCH. When a Senator is on his feet seeking recognition, he is entitled to be recognized. Mr. Secretary, I sought recognition as a Senator of the United States. I was entitled to recognition. The only purpose for which I rose was to ask as a parliamentary question whether there had been a decision that the Bilbo matter should be laid over until Monday or any other definite time. If there has been, I have not been advised of it. I propound that parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not believe that the Senator from New Mexico was denied any privilege by the occupant of the chair.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Maine had the floor and had moved to recess. He yielded to various Senators, and then decided that if he were ever to get a vote on his motion he should not yield to any other Senator. The Senator from Maine declined to yield further, in order that there might be a vote on his motion.

Mr. HATCH. If I said anything at all that was disrespectful or in any way against the Senator from Maine, I withdraw it.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that on no occasion has he ever spoken unkindly or disrespectfully.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. HATCH. I believe I still have the floor. I was not showing any disrespect to the present occupant of the chair; but I think that when a Senator is on his feet seeking recognition he ought to be recognized. I still have not had an answer to my question. The parliamentary inquiry was, Was there a decision at any time during the debate today to lay the Bilbo matter over until Monday or sometime next week?

The SECRETARY. There has been no definite action of the Senate to postpone it until Monday.

Mr. HATCH. There has been no definite action of the Senate on that question?

The SECRETARY. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Then the Senator from Ohio, in his kind advice to the Senate, to the Nation, and to the world, in which he said that we had postponed action until Monday, was entirely in error. I mean no reflection upon the Senator from Ohio. I am merely trying to straighten out the parliamentary situation. As I recall, the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to have the oath of office administered to his colleague.

The SECRETARY. That is the pending question.

Mr. HATCH. There has been no disposal of the Bilbo matter?

The SECRETARY. No.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Chair. My inquiry has been answered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Michigan will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it not a disposition of the motion to swear in Senator BILBO when the motion is placed on the table? Is not that a disposition of the matter under rule VI?

The SECRETARY. Not for a definite time.

Mr. FERGUSON. Not for a definite time; but for the time being that is a disposition, under rule VI, is it not?

The SECRETARY. Temporarily so.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. Secretary——

The SECRETARY. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I feel very much as the senior Senator from New Mexico feels. I realize that when a Senator rises to his feet he ought to be recognized.

I merely wished to ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio one question. He always charges filibuster. I have been on this committee. There has been no filibustering on my part. I want the people of the country to know the exact situation which my colleagues the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma and the distinguished junior Senator from Louisiana found.

I dislike to hear the continual talk that goes out over the radio that we are going to filibuster, before we can hear one word of truth as to what happened, or before we can make a single report, except the majority report, which was filed after the minority views were first filed. It will be my business—and certainly it should be agreeable to the junior Senator from Louisiana—to make certain that every word of the testimony and every word of what happened in Mississippi is made known to the people of the United States. After all, Mississippi is a sovereign State, and the people of Mississippi should be heard from.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for the regular order.

The SECRETARY. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. OVERTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SECRETARY. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hatch	Pepper
Baldwin	Hawkes	Reed
Ball	Hickenlooper	Revercomb
Barkley	Hill	Robertson, Wyo.
Bridges	Hoey	Russell
Brooks	Johnson, Colo.	Saltonstall
Buck	Johnston, S. C.	Stewart
Capehart	Lucas	Taft

Downey	McMahon	Tobey
Eastland	Maybank	Wherry
Ellender	Millikin	White
Ferguson	Moore	Wiley
Fulbright	Morse	Wilson
Green	Myers	Young
Gurney	Overton

The SECRETARY. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. On the pending question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] has requested recognition. He wishes to speak on the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. A while ago it was generally agreed that the Senate would take a recess until tomorrow. When the Senator from Maine made his motion, I think there was some confusion and misunderstanding. I have a feeling that if the Senate had really understood the situation it would have voted to take a recess, instead of voting against taking a recess. Personally, I should like to see the motion renewed in a moment of calm, to see what the wishes of the Senate are about it. I do not think we are going to get anything done here tonight. Unless the Senator from Maine wishes to renew the motion, if the Senator from Louisiana will permit me to do so, I myself am willing to move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary, I have no desire to make the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then will the Senator yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I now move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. MORSE and other Senators requested the yeas and nays; the yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—32

Aiken	Johnson, Colo.	Reed

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 3, 1947

This being the day fixed by the twentieth amendment of the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members of the House of Representatives of the Eightieth Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, Hon. Ralph R. Roberts.

The Chaplain of the Seventy-ninth Congress, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following

PRAYER

Infinite and merciful Father, from whom cometh all wisdom, goodness, and power, we would unite our spirits in the ministry of worship. We pray Thee to endow us with faith in that Providence which heretofore has shaped the destiny of our Republic. O enable us to realize deeply the sanctity of our mission and understand that the measure of our power is the measure of our Christian virtues: "Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain who build it." Blessed is he who can look serenely back, who works wisely in the present, and who realizes that his new opportunity is in the forthcoming year, the threshold of whose temple we have now crossed. With the past revealed and facing the future, may we remember that we have been elevated to a great position of authority and responsibility, taking no counsel of fear but smiting the forces of anti-God which threaten the foundations of human rights. Therefore, by act and example, let our work flame forth over our country and the world, for the security and peace of all peoples.

Lord God, be Thou with our President, our retiring Speaker, and all who will serve us in the year to come. Let Thy divine impulse abide with us each day. In the name of the world's Saviour we pray.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever.

Amen.

The DOORKEEPER. Representatives-elect: This is the day fixed by the Constitution for the meeting of the Eightieth Congress. Certificates of election covering the 435 seats in the Eightieth Congress have been received by the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-ninth Congress, and the names of those persons whose credentials show that they were regularly elected as Representatives in accordance with the laws of their respective States or of the United States will be called. As the roll is called, following the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the State of Alabama, Representatives-elect will please answer to their names to determine whether a quorum is present.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll by States, and the following Representatives-elect answered to their names:

The DOORKEEPER. The roll call discloses the presence of 429 Members. A quorum is present.

The Doorkeeper will state that credentials, regular in form, have been filed showing the election of the Honorable E. L. BARTLETT as Delegate from the Territory of Alaska and of the Honorable JOSEPH R. FARRINGTON as Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii. The Doorkeeper has also received a certificate showing the appointment by the Governor of Puerto Rico of the Honorable A. FERNÓS-ISERN as Resident Commissioner to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Honorable Jesús T. Piñero.

Since the regular election of Representatives to the Eightieth Congress, two changes have occurred, as a result of which two vacancies now exist: In the Second Congressional District of the State of Wisconsin occasioned by the death of the late Honorable Robert K. Henry, and in the Eighth Congressional District of the State of Alabama by the resignation of the Honorable JOHN J. SPARKMAN.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

The DOORKEEPER. The next business in order is the election of a Speaker of the House, and nominations are now in order.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Doorkeeper, by direction and authority of the Republican conference, representing a majority of the membership of the House of Representatives, I have the honor to place in nomination for Speaker of the House of Representatives during the continuance of the Eightieth Congress Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., Representative-elect from the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. FORAND. By direction of the Democratic caucus, I nominate as candidate for Speaker, Representative-elect Hon. SAM RAYBURN, of Texas.

The DOORKEEPER. Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., a Representative-elect from the State of Massachusetts, and Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative-elect from the State of Texas, have been placed in nomination. Are there further nominations?

There being no further nominations, the Doorkeeper will appoint the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. NORBLAD], the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], and the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD] to act as tellers.

The roll will now be called and those responding will indicate by surname the nominee of their choice.

The tellers will please take their places at the desk in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

The tellers having taken their places, the House proceeded to vote for Speaker.

The following is the result of the vote:

The DOORKEEPER. The tellers agree in their tally. The total number of votes cast is 426, of which the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., has received 244; and the Honorable SAM RAYBURN 182. Therefore the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., a Representative-elect from the State of Massachusetts, having received a majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Eightieth Congress.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] will please escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

Mr. RAYBURN. Members of the House of Representatives, we have come to the opening of the Eightieth Congress. During all of these years the House of Representatives has deserved, and in my opinion has had, the respect of the thinking people of our country. It has been so because the people have sent men and women here of high character, of great patriotism, and splendid intelligence.

Throughout the history of the Congress, in the House of Representatives, 44 men have served as Speaker. Today we are inaugurating the forty-fifth. During the occupancy of this high position by these 44 men all of them have been men of high character, great patriotism, and absolute fairness.

Today I have the high privilege and the great personal pleasure, if it had to come, of presenting to you your Speaker, my friend, your friend, the friend of mankind, a man of unquestioned character, of demonstrated ability, with a great, fine heart and with fairness; and I predict for him a career such that history will record him as one of the great Presiding Officers who has occupied this position.

JOE MARTIN, you are undertaking an arduous and onerous task. Sometimes you may think it is a thankless one, but on the whole you will find that these men and women are mighty fine folks to deal with. I wish you well and congratulate you upon the high honor which has been conferred upon you. And now I introduce to you your Speaker, JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., of Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Ladies and gentlemen of the House of Representatives of the Eightieth Congress, in assuming the duties of Speaker of this House of Representatives, I am deeply grateful to my colleagues for having bestowed this signal honor upon me.

No man could fail to be deeply touched by the great honor and privilege of being the Speaker of this historic and august body. No man could fail to have a deep sense of responsibility in assuming the duties of the Speakership because of the tremendous problems which beset our country and our times.

I pay warm tribute to the honorable and able gentleman from Texas whom I succeed to the chair, and who so generously and graciously presented me to the House.

Colleagues, the Eightieth Congress comes into existence in a time when most of the world lies crushed, broken, and in waste from the ravages of the most terrible war mankind has ever experienced.

Orderly government has, to a great extent, lost control in many countries.

Millions of men and women—and little children—are still displaced far from their native homes; they are still hungry; they are still dazed by the enormity of the horrible disaster which has wrecked their lives, laid waste their native lands, left them without homes, and, in many cases, bereft of loved ones.

Those millions of war-stricken peoples turn to the beacon of freedom and security, which, thank God, still burns brightly in the United States of America—sending its gleams of hope to the furthermost points of the world. If the torch of freedom and progress in the United States should flicker out, the world would be left in darkness. Therefore, for the sake of the world—of civilization—for the sake of those millions who have been crushed under the juggernaut of war—for the sake of our own future—we must keep the torch of freedom and progress alight in America.

So help us God, it is not going to flicker out.

Here at home we face grave and pressing problems. The debt into which this Nation has been plunged is of such magnitude it cannot be paid off in more than a century. Our people are bowed down under a burden of taxation which is well-nigh intolerable.

Strikes, industrial disagreements, scarcity of raw materials and machinery, and a large remnant of governmental controls still hamper production.

In this time and in the face of these momentous problems, the Republicans do not gloat over a victory won. We Republicans are conscious of our responsibilities as we seek the cooperation of every man and woman in this Nation to help pull our beloved country out of the economic bogs into which mistaken policies and two wars on two oceans have plunged us.

I say to you, my colleagues, with deep sincerity, that, for the constructive accomplishment of good government, I hope to see a degree of cooperation between the Members on both sides of the aisle, and between this and the other branch of the Congress, which will be unsurpassed in the history of our Nation.

This cooperation is requisite if we are to accomplish successfully the painful readjustments from war conditions of deficit spending, waste, and the don't-count-the-cost policy. Those readjustments must be made in every field of our domestic economy—agriculture, labor, small business, big business, and by all the citizens.

These readjustments facing us call for hard work, endurance, patience, and, above all else, honest, earnest, sustained cooperation between all classes, sections, and individuals in the Nation.

No one group or class of the people, no section of the country, can long profit at the expense of the rest. Economic and social organization must, like freedom, be based upon equal justice to endure. Whenever that balanced justice is disturbed, it must be restored through proper readjustment, however painful that readjustment may be.

We simply must get back to the sound philosophy that the Government does not support the people; the people must support the Government.

Past events and present conditions prove conclusively that whenever the people surrender their liberties to a government by men for too long a time disaster results.

No disaster can overtake America without all the citizens suffering the consequences. We know that through painful experience.

The Government's control over the private affairs of the citizens must be ended, and the people's control over their Government must be fully restored as soon as practicable.

To exercise wise and efficient control over their Government and their governors, the people must be frankly told the facts about their Government, its policies, and its operations. Truth, honesty, and sincere administration in government—administration for the common good and not for partisan advantage or private gain—will keep America great, free, prosperous, and powerful.

There is no room in America for those who would destroy America. All true Americans love and are loyal to our constitutional system and the Bill of Rights. The very essence of all that makes life worth living is expressed in the Bill of Rights.

There is no room in the Government of the United States for any who prefer the communistic system, or any other form of absolutism, to our American system. Those who do not believe in the way of life which has made us the greatest nation of all time should not be permitted to occupy positions of trust or power in the American Government. They should be—they must be—removed.

Our American concept of government rests upon the idea of a dominant Congress. Congress is the people's special instrument of control over their Government and their governors. This Nation can remain free only through a strong, vigorous Congress, a Congress determined to face firmly its responsibilities, and a Congress which will protect the liberties of the people and not delegate its fundamental powers either to the Executive or to arrogant bureaucrats.

We must make secure those principles of freedom, of government, and of progress for which our heroic men and women have through our history laid down their lives or borne wounds. The ideals they so nobly fought for we must maintain. Those of us privileged to live for our country must see to it that those who have died or suffered for American ideals have not sacrificed in vain.

Religious liberty, the rights of free speech, of free assembly, of free press, must be held inviolate. They are the safeguards against any dangerous drift away from our constitutional representative system of government into some form of political monopoly. On the other hand, freedom of speech, of assembly, and of press does not, and must not be permitted to, mean that enemies of this country and of our people, conspiring to overthrow by violence our governmental, economic, and social system, shall have license so to conspire under the protection of the Constitution.

Once again history has clearly demonstrated that only under a government of laws, and not under a government by men, can any people long remain free and go forward to a better life. The people, given the truth, possess an intuitive wisdom and sense of justice greater than that of any governmental bureaucracy. The history of America has proved that so.

In false information and propaganda, designed to mislead the people, lie the seeds of national destruction.

We cannot—we simply cannot—allow any forces outside or inside this Nation to destroy our American way, either by force of arms, or by keeping alive conflicts between classes within our own country.

Before we can help the rest of the world effectively, we must regain a basis of full production, full opportunity for jobs, and lower prices in a free American economy.

No sound economist can deny, or does deny, that competition is a better regulator of prices and quality than all the governmental bureaus and departmental regulations which could be organized or devised.

Price levels mean nothing if people cannot get fuel to warm them, food to sustain them, homes to shelter them, and fabrics to clothe them.

Wage increases can mean nothing if they are to be offset by weeks of idleness in strikes, and by such increased costs and prices as will rob the wage earners and the salaried people, the farmers, and the fixed-income people alike of purchasing power through a reduced exchange value of the dollar.

We must find a formula and a basis upon which disagreements between labor and management can be settled justly and effectively without stoppage of production. Such a basis and formula can never be found until both sides are ready to shoulder their fair share of responsibility for contracts; to cooperate in achieving increased production, lower prices, and fair profits, without decreasing wages or lengthening work hours.

Such a basis and formula for progress and plenty can never be found unless production is kept going while labor-management disagreements are being settled. To this great pressing problem we must give our immediate attention.

The only persons in America who could hope for a failure of cooperation between labor and management, who could hope for a failure of production and continued skyrocketing of prices, who could hope for continued controversies between great organizations of labor unions, or between unions themselves, with picket lines, silent factories, and paralyzed production, are those Communists or Fascists—and there is not a nickel's worth of difference between them—who would like to overturn this grand constitutional system of ours in favor of some form of tyrannical dictatorship under which they could loot the Nation.

Those who would have the people of this Nation believe America is ready to go to seed and wither on the vine simply close their eyes to the plain facts of accomplishments.

In 3 years, free labor, free agriculture, free industry, and free citizens, cooperating with each other, surpassed 40 years of war preparations in Japan, 20 years of war preparations in Italy, 20 years in Russia, and 12 years in Germany.

In 3 years we were fighting an offensive war and were on the road to victory. We helped our allies with millions of men and billions of dollars in machines and supplies of war in the Atlantic conflict, while we fought another war in the Pacific practically unaided, and almost single-handed, and won them both. No informed person now even pretends America's part in the great struggle was any less than decisive.

An America which can achieve that miracle in war can accomplish even greater miracles in peace. Our trouble, if we fail, will not be because we cannot. It will be because we will not.

We can attain full production, lower prices, and prosperity in this Nation. We can know a prosperity greater than we ever knew before. We can achieve miracles of new comforts, new outlets for our inventive genius and our unparalleled capacity for mass production.

One of the most important problems directly related to increased production and lower prices is taxation. A decrease in taxes can be made possible only through, and must be accompanied by, extensive economies in government.

It is not the intention of the Republicans in the Congress blindly and wildly to slash here and there. The best evidence of that is the study committees we have had at work for 2 years and more, preparing for the time when we should be charged, as we now are charged by the Nation, with the responsibility of putting this country back on the American rails of progress. Our studies have shown Government costs can be reduced, and we intend to reduce them.

High taxes have long been recognized as an obstacle to business expansion. We intend to reduce tax rates wherever and as promptly as it is feasible to do so. We have given that promise to the American people, and we intend that it shall be fulfilled.

We must, after 17 long years, balance the Budget, commence paying off the national debt, reduce taxes to free the money of the individual for achieving a higher national standard of living, provide the incentive for business expansion which will create more jobs, more wages, more Federal revenue, and at the same time adjust prices and quality on a sound basis.

In our foreign affairs there is danger the war-stricken nations may be led to rely too much on the United States and try too little to help themselves.

We all recognize that while we desire to do our full share in helping the rest of the world, we must avoid the danger of so depleting and weakening ourselves as to be dragged down with them, instead of being able to help them lift themselves up with us. Only a strong, sound, solvent, free America can help rescue the world.

Never in the history of the world, however, has there been a greater opportunity for any nation to lead other bewildered and confused peoples toward the path of freedom and Christianity as is offered us now.

The greatest influence for good, for freedom, for spiritual, cultural, social, and economic progress on the rest of the world will be found in how we, in America, solve our problems.

We must face up to the challenge of this high purpose to save ourselves, and to help save the rest of the world from despotism, economic chaos, social confusion, and final utter destruction of all that makes life worth while.

I am deeply convinced if America is to be saved and put back on the high road to spiritual, cultural, social, and material progress it must be done by ourselves, and ourselves alone.

We must cooperate as citizens in the common good.

We must recognize the desperate necessity for the people to close ranks and fight for the right.

We, therefore, call upon every liberty-loving man and woman in this Nation, regardless of race, color, creed, or party, to cooperate with us in an honest effort to save this blessed country of ours from ruin and destruction by internal economic suicide.

We call upon every section and every class of good Americans to stand with us for an adequate, efficient national defense, while we endeavor to persuade the rest of the world to adopt a practical formula for disarmament and the outlawing of war.

We must set our faces sternly against any trend toward any weakening of religious liberty and influence in our civilization, or any sacrilegious creed of godlessness. We must stand firm and unyielding against any doctrine which would seek to persuade the people to cast their high ideals and their reverence for God aside, and embark upon a materialism which would substitute the state for the Deity.

The Declaration of Independence was founded upon faith in God. The Constitution was builded upon it. The pillars of our liberty and progress rest upon it.

We want and hope for the cooperation of the Democrats of the House of Representatives and of all other branches of the Government, of all classes, and all citizens, to the end that we may meet the task successfully.

God give us the strength and the wisdom, the will and the faith to go forward to meet and solve these problems, and save for ourselves and posterity all that our forebears so nobly sacrificed to provide for us.

The Chair will ask his distinguished colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] to administer the oath of office.

Mr. KNUTSON then administered the oath of office to Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. Some years ago the old custom of having each delegation come to the well and take the oath of office was subrogated, and there was substituted instead the precedent that all Members should rise in their places and take the oath of office at the same time. The Chair thinks the latter precedent is much more convenient and much more practical. The Chair, therefore, asks each Member—and each Delegate-elect to the Eightieth Congress—to rise in his place that the Speaker may administer to them the oath of office.

The Members and Delegates-elect rose, and the Speaker administered to them the oath of office.

SELECTION OF MAJORITY LEADER

EIGHTH REPORT TO CONGRESS ON OPERATIONS OF UNRRA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the eighth quarterly report covering the operations of UNRRA and expenditure of funds appropriated by the Congress on a cumulative basis as of June 30, 1946.

Since my last report, the Congress has appropriated the remaining funds pledged by this Government as its second contribution to UNRRA. Out of the total of $2,700,000,000 appropriated by this Government for the relief and rehabilitation of peoples in Europe and Asia, shipments from the United States have totaled 9,140,614 long tons with a value of $1,154,072,000 as of June 30, 1946. On the same date world shipments were 12,766,975 long tons with a value of $1,707,149,000. Tonnage from the United States thus amounts to approximately 71.6 percent and the value of United States shipments to approximately 68 percent of the total.

On August 5, 1946, the 48 member nations of UNRRA held their Fifth Council Session at Geneva, Switzerland. One of the decisions taken was that UNRRA could extend the date for making shipments to Europe out of available resources beyond the date of December 31, 1946, and to the Far East beyond March 31, 1947. The Congress is familiar with the delays which made it impossible for UNRRA to complete its shipments before these terminal dates. The extension of time will apply primarily to industrial and agricultural rehabilitation items, to the repair of essential facilities, and to provide a substitute for the draft animals decimated by the enemy. The bulk of food in the country programs, however, will be shipped by the end of the calendar year.

It was also recommended at the Fifth Council Session that immediate steps be taken under the direction of the United Nations Assembly to determine the need which will still exist in 1947. Measures have been inaugurated on this problem.

The Congress and the people of the United States may be proud of the contribution they have made to the rehabilitation of devastated countries through UNRRA, but we must also realize that the job has not been completed. It is essential that we look ahead to the relief requirements which will confront war-devastated areas in the coming year. At this time crops all over Europe are being harvested and, if weather conditions continue to be favorable, food reserves should be more adequate than in the past year. Nevertheless, despite prodigious efforts by the peoples of the liberated countries, agricultural production will still fall greatly below the prewar levels.

Here in the United States, we must continue our endeavors to conserve our food resources. Crops in the United States give promise of large yields, but the world food situation will be critical. Many countries will be forced to import food in excess of normal imports because full production has not yet been achieved. Prudence in the consumption of world food supplies is necessary.

The United States is aware of the fact that it may be necessary to find various methods of affording further assistance to some countries in 1947. To this end various agencies of this Government are completing plans so that proper solutions can be effected.

Having been largely successful in averting world tragedy during the most difficult period after the war, it would be doubly tragic if we were not prepared to meet the less difficult task ahead. We must be ready with workable plans which will enable the war-devastated countries to face the future with confidence and success.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

NINTH QUARTERLY REPORT COVERING OPERATIONS OF UNRRA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

DECEMBER 26, 1946.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a message from the President of the United States, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, received in the office of the Clerk at 4:30 p. m., December 23, 1946.

Very truly yours,

H. NEWLIN MEGILL,
Acting Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the ninth quarterly report covering the operations of UNRRA and the expenditure of funds appropriated by the Congress for this purpose.

During the quarter under review the United States completed its contribution of $2,700,000,000 to the work of UNRRA, a figure which represents 2 percent of our national income and 72 percent of the total resources of UNRRA. Estimated shipments from the United States during the quarter of 3,596,517 tons were valued at approximately $284,915,000 and represented approximately 77 percent and 71 percent, respectively, of UNRRA's total shipments for the quarter. Through the quarter under review total UNRRA shipments were approximately 16,723,342 tons valued at approximately $2,045,035,000, of which the United States provided 12,221,488 tons (73 percent) valued at approximately $1,438,987,000 (70 percent).

An important matter to which I should like to call the particular attention of the Congress is that concerned with the resolutions passed at the Fifth Council Session of UNRRA in Geneva last August. The several resolutions express the views of the Council at that time with respect to the problem of fully liquidating the UNRRA organization and with the disposition of its assets.

These matters were also scheduled for further discussion at the Sixth Council Session convened in Washington on December 10, 1946.

The United Nations are actively discussing the care of displaced persons after UNRRA ceases its operations. Further discussion by the United Nations is concerned with the problem of post-UNRRA relief in 1947 for those countries which may not, even after UNRRA completes its great work, be able to take care of their own needs. UNRRA deliveries of relief and rehabilitation supplies in 1947 may well amount to $750,000,000 and it is therefore unlikely that more than a few of the liberated areas will require further free assistance. The proposal of the State Department is that the spot problems of urgent relief needs in 1947 be met by each supplying government entering into arrangements directly with those requiring assistance and that the Secretariat of the United Nations be used as a central point for exchanging and pooling information on the part of all member governments. With this approach to the problem of relief in 1947 I am in full accord.

With the next report to the Congress it will be possible to provide a clearer picture of the plans for the liquidation of UNRRA and the provision of post-UNRRA relief needs in 1947.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

TWENTY-THIRD REPORT TO CONGRESS ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

DECEMBER 27, 1946.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a message from the President of the United States, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, received in the office of the Clerk at 11:45 a. m., December 27, 1946.

Very truly yours,
H. NEWLIN MEGILL,
Acting Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith to the Congress the twenty-third report of operations under the Lend-Lease Act.

Lend-lease operations since VJ-day have been limited largely to negotiating final settlement agreements and to certain other liquidation activities. The principal liquidation activity has related to the substantial quantities of lend-lease supplies which were in inventory or procurement in the United States at the time that direct lend-lease aid was terminated. Steps were taken immediately to sell to lend-lease countries the supplies which had been procured or contracted for on their behalf. Such sales agreements were entered into with 13 countries, the total amount aggregating almost $1,200,000,000. Most of these supplies have already been shipped and the remainder will be transferred to the recipient countries as rapidly as possible. This report discusses the terms and provisions of the sales agreements.

In the period covered by this report, agreements on final settlement for lend-lease and reciprocal aid have been signed with the Governments of France, Belgium, Turkey, Australia, New Zealand, and India. Detailed accounts of these agreements are contained in this report. The first settlement agreement was negotiated with the United Kingdom and was discussed in the twenty-second report.

Final settlements have been signed with countries which received 70 percent of total lend-lease aid. Countries with which agreements remain to be negotiated include the U. S. S. R., China, Greece, The Netherlands, Norway, and the Union of South Africa. Preliminary discussions concerning settlements are now in progress with several of these countries.

In the negotiation of the settlements the objective has been to carry out the provisions of Article VII of the Master Lend-Lease Agreements with various countries, which provide that "* * * the terms and conditions thereof shall be such as not to burden commerce between the two countries but to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between them and the betterment of world-wide economic relations." Viewed in the light of the objectives of the Lend-Lease Act and the Master Agreements, I believe that the settlements which have been worked out not only are highly satisfactory to the United States in the financial sense but also serve the long-range interests of this country by providing one of the foundations of economic stability in the post-war world.

Although the value of lend-lease can never be satisfactorily measured in monetary terms, I think it should be noted that return to the United States from lend-lease through September 30, 1946, exceeded 10 billion dollars, including reverse lend-lease aid, cash payments for goods and services furnished under lend-lease, payment made or to be made under the final settlement agreements, and the sale of supplies in inventory or procurement.

Negotiation of the remainder of the final lend-lease settlements, fiscal activities in connection with the payments due under the various agreements, and the recording and reporting of fiscal operations are the principal continuing lend-lease functions.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of title 40, sections 175 and 176, United States Code, the Chair appoints the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. AUCHINCLOSS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] members of the House Office Building Commission to serve with himself.

REFERENCE OF BILLS INTRODUCED TODAY

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a statement concerning the introduction and reference of bills today.

As Members are aware, they have the privilege today of introducing bills. Heretofore on the opening day of a new Congress several thousand bills have been introduced. It will be readily apparent to all Members that it will be a physical impossibility for the Speaker to examine each bill for reference inasmuch as the rules which were adopted today have changed the jurisdiction of many committees heretofore in existence. The Chair will do his best to refer as many bills as possible today but he will ask the indulgence of Members if he is unable to refer all of them that may be introduced. Those bills which are not referred and do not appear in the RECORD as of today will be included in the next day's RECORD and printed with a date as of today. The Chair feels that he should make this statement at this time so Members may be aware of the difficulties that immediately present themselves.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed on the part of the House to join a committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the House has assembled, and that the House is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, has notified the President that the House is organized.

JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS ON JANUARY 6, 1947

SENATE

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1947

(Legislative day of Friday, January 3, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Secretary, Leslie L. Biffle, resumed the chair.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, who art love and light and life, Thou knowest all the way by which we have come, and the pathway our feet are now treading, and the unbeaten track before us. Our times are in Thy hands. We would not ask to see life's distant scenes.

Thou hast taught us to love truth and beauty and goodness. May Thy truth make us free—free from pride and prejudice and from the ugly sins of disposition that doth so easily beset us. Lift us above the mud and scum of mere things into the holiness of Thy beauty so that even the common tasks and the trivial round may be edged with crimson and gold. Lead us this day in the paths of righteousness for Thy name's sake. Enrich us with those durable satisfactions of life so that the multiplying years may not find us bankrupt in those things which matter most, the golden currency of faith and hope and love. May the awesome responsibilities of this high hill but clothe these chosen representatives of the Nation in the garments of humility, as befits our partial knowledge and our imperfect judgments seeing as but through a glass darkly. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I inquire of the Chair what is the business before the Senate?

The SECRETARY. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] that the oath of office be administered to the Senator-elect from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] upon which question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary, at the risk of being charged with engaging in a filibuster, I desire to take a few moments of the time of the Senate this morning to discuss some questions presented by the matter now being considered which to me are far more important than the rights of any individual in this Chamber or outside the Chamber.

It was just asked, What is the question before the Senate? The Chair stated that the question was on the motion of the Senator from Maine that his colleague-elect be permitted to take the oath of office. It is not my intention to discuss that question. All of us know that that is not the question before the Senate. There was but one question before us all day yesterday, as, perhaps, there will be all day today and tomorrow and perhaps on and on. That question is, Shall the Senator-elect from Mississippi be permitted to take the oath of office and be seated as a Member of this body? It may be disguised or camouflaged, but that is the real question, and it is the only issue. To that for a little while I would direct my remarks.

I said that I thought there was involved in these proceedings something far more important than the rights of any individual, a question which transcends the right of the Senator from Mississippi to take the oath of office. There is involved a question of fundamental justice and fairness, of right dealing and proper procedure in the Senate of the United States. After all, the issue which is now presented is a simple one. The credentials of the Senator-elect from Mississippi have been filed; they have not been questioned; they are in due and regular form. Under any normal procedure and in ordinary circumstances the Senator-elect from Mississippi would have walked down the aisle yesterday morning, as he started to do, and would have had the oath of office administered to him. But normal procedure was not followed. When his name was called objection was made, that he be denied the right to take the oath of office which is administered to every other Member of this body. There was a simple objection, save for the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] which did contain charges and specifications. So far as the record now stands there is no charge against the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think that the record is clear that yesterday there was offered in evidence, that is there was sent to the desk and it was asked that it be printed in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings of the Senate a copy of the report of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. At the same time there was filed with the Secretary of the Senate and with the Senate a copy of the testimony. So we had yesterday in the Senate and within the conscience of each Senator, because the material was placed upon his desk, a copy of the report of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program and a copy of the testimony taken at the hearings of the special committee. That testimony was taken after notice to Senator BILBO. He was present with his counsel. He had an opportunity to ask, and did ask, questions, and he had no other witnesses to present. The record of the report of the committee clearly indicates that fact. So I——

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Michigan will pardon me, I did not yield to him to make a speech. I am sure he will go into the matter thoroughly in his own time, and, in fact, I had expected to discuss the very matter which he has just now raised. I have not overlooked the filing of the report of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. I shall give that report every bit of weight which it is entitled to receive. When I say the "weight which it is entitled to receive," I mean exactly that, for it has no standing in this body as coming from a committee authorized to file charges or make complaints against individual Senators.

I repeat what I said, that there is now no charge against the Senator from Mississippi. True, there is a report from the special committee, and so far as I know it may be absolutely correct in every detail; true, the newspapers have been full of comment for weeks and months; true, idle gossip as to the Senator from Mississippi has spread over the Nation; but since when, I ask, has the Senate of the United States proceeded to try one of its Members or one who is eligible to membership in this body upon gossip, upon rumor, or upon unfounded, unauthorized, and unwarranted committee reports?

I said that fundamental issues are involved. In all considerations of justice, in all jurisprudence, no matter what the tribunal may be, one of the most fundamental issues is that every person accused of crime, or of wrongdoing of any kind, shall have the right to have the charges against him set forth formally, specifically, and certainly. No man anywhere should ever be brought to the bar of justice without knowing with what he is charged. So fundamental is that principle that it alone should deny the position of those who seek to bar the Senator-elect from Mississippi at the door of this body without filing a charge against him, and without taking evidence on such charge.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think the record will show that prior to the hearing by the Special Committee To Investigate the War Program Senator BILBO was furnished a memorandum containing the charges that were to be taken up at that hearing and that is set forth in the record.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary, I have the highest regard and respect in the world for the integrity, the ability, and the judicial training of the Senator from Michigan. I served with him on the committee, and I think we were in almost complete accord on every matter that ever came before us; but I am dumfounded to hear a Member of this body say that a memorandum which has been filed with a committee is sufficient upon which to try a man as to his fitness to be a Member of this body.

A graver charge cannot be brought against a man than that he is unfit, that he is unworthy, to sit here with us. I am saying nothing about his guilt or innocence. For the moment I am not concerned about that. I do not care how guilty he may be; he may be base and degraded to the lowest possible depth; but, notwithstanding that, fundamental principles of justice demand and require that the charges against him be filed in regular order, and that he be afforded an opportunity to be heard upon exact and specific charges. I said it was a simple issue. It is simple, so simple that I cannot see how any person can deny or dispute the fundamental principle of American justice to which I have adverted. In the position I took yesterday, and in the position I take today, I support, as the Senator from Louisiana said he did yesterday, not merely the Constitution, but fundamental principles of justice, which must not be denied to any human being anywhere; most of all, in the Senate of the United States.

I do not want to be technical. I do not ask that all the forms and niceties of indictments and informations be followed. I do not require that every "t" be crossed and every "i" dotted; but I demand that substantial charges be made, and that the next step also be followed—that after charges are made, the accused be given a hearing upon the specific charges.

I realize that a hearing was held and that the Senator from Mississippi was accorded the right to appear and to testify; but in giving him that right he was denied another fundamental right of American justice, without which no man can have a fair hearing and a fair trial. He was not permitted, either in person or by counsel, to cross-examine the witnesses who appeared and testified against him.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER rose.

Mr. HATCH. For the benefit of the Senator from Iowa, let me say that I am now referring to the hearing by the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the Special Campaign Investigating Committee, the Senator from Mississippi was afforded the opportunity, through himself or his counsel, to submit any and every question to be asked witnesses who appeared against him, and to my certain knowledge, with the exception of the last two or three witnesses, whose testimony I did not hear, every question submitted by the Senator from Mississippi through his counsel or on his own request was asked of each witness who appeared against him.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understand the Senator from New Mexico is referring to the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

Mr. HATCH. I referred to the hearing.

Mr. FERGUSON. I want to say that prior to the hearing, as shown by the record, it was agreed between the committee and Senator BILBO and his counsel, Forrest Jackson, that they should be permitted to ask questions. They submitted many questions, and in each case the identical question was asked of the witnesses, so that he had an opportunity to cross-examine each and every witness produced at the open hearing.

If the able Senator from New Mexico will examine the report and the committee hearing, he will find that to be the fact.

Mr. HATCH. I repeat the statement as to my high regard for the Senator from Michigan, for his legal knowledge, for his training, and for his essential fairness; but, if submitting questions to be asked through a committee member is an exhaustion of the right of cross-examination, the Senator has an entirely different concept of the right of cross-examination from mine, and from any interpretation of it that has ever been applied in any court of justice in this land. The right to cross-examine was not met by the steps which were taken and the gratuitous permission which was given to write out a question and submit it to a committee member, to let him in turn propound it to the witness. Most of us are lawyers and most of us have had experience in cross-examining witnesses, and we know how vital it is to have the right and the power to ask questions, to follow them up, in order to develop points we are trying to elucidate, or to impeach the witness himself who is testifying. No, the Senator-elect from Mississippi has not been accorded the right to cross-examine witnesses.

Mr. Secretary, even if he has been accorded that right, full justice has not yet been done, for I return to the original proposition that a charge should be filed and a hearing should be had on the charge, or upon the charges, whatever they may be, alone. In the hearing of such charges the Senator should have the right to examine the witnesess, to present testimony of his own, to cross-examine, and to be given some measure of the simple justice that is accorded to the lowest criminal in this land. Oh, I am not asking for those further safeguards and protections: the presumption of innocence; that evidence must be sufficient to convince beyond a reasonable doubt. I am not asking for the application of any extreme, unusual principles. I am asking only for fairness—for ordinary justice.

I am going to be fair with the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, which has made its report. I think that report might be taken as the basis of a formal charge against the Senator-elect from Mississippi. But, as yet, I have heard no one say, "This is the charge; we are trying him upon these particular matters, and are going to exclude others."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. We are not proposing to try Senator BILBO in any sense. We merely ask that the disputed question whether he be sworn in pending the termination of the so-called trial be postponed until the Senate be organized and that the swearing in of the other 35 Senators be not held up. There is no disposition at this time to try Senator BILBO or any of the facts connected with his particular case.

Mr. HATCH. No; there is no disposition to try him now, for in the minds of the majority he has already been tried, he has already been found guilty, and they would now impose the sentence of excluding him from the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that one committee, an arm of this body, by a committee report, has set forth an indictment which alleges that Senator BILBO's credentials are not subject to be accepted—I forget the exact language of the report of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program—amounting, if you please, in the Senator's own language, to a formal indictment and charge against this man.

I submit to the Senator that in any State in this land, when a grand jury indicts, it is not the trial, but, nevertheless, the accused is placed under the pains and penalty of an appearance bond, and his liberties are restrained until that indictment has been resolved, either by conviction or acquittal, or some other method. I submit to the Senator that there is exactly the same parallel here. An indictment has been made by a formal body of the Senate. We are merely asking that pending the hearing upon that indictment certain restraints accepted in any court of the land be imposed upon this man who is formally charged by a solemnly and duly constituted arm of the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. I think we are making progress. It is now made certain and clear that these are the charges; that this is the indictment. Very well, I am certain the Senator from Mississippi will be glad to know now for the first time with what he is specifically charged, and upon what charges he is either now or hereafter going to be tried. I take it that he may also assume, since the Senator from Iowa has drawn the parallel of the criminal case, that the evidence against him will be confined to the charges that are made in the committee report, and that he may prepare his defense in accordance with those charges, and shall not have to defend against anything else.

It was further said that a man charged by indictment is required to give an appearance bond. Yes; he is required to give an appearance bond in order to secure his attendance at the trial, and that is all. Sometimes in graver cases his liberty is taken away from him because the necessity of protecting society is such that it is required. That is the basis of criminal law. Do Senators anticipate there is any danger of the Senator from Mississippi not being present to take his oath of office?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I made the statement respecting the indictment and the appearance bond to illustrate the fact that restraint is automatically, under a free system of justice, placed upon one who is formally charged by an arm of justice with the commission of a crime, prior to the adjudication of the charge. The question of restraint is the question of holding in abeyance until the decision by a lawfully constituted adjudicating body can be reached.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. With respect to the thought just suggested, what is the restraint? The restraint is merely that the individual give bond for his appearance. That is the restraint, and the American citizen is still a free American citizen. He has the right to come into the court of justice; he has the right to go to the ballot box and vote. He has the right to deal and traffic in the merchandise of the country. He has a right to attend not only tribunals of justice but sessions of legislative bodies. He is a free American citizen and he is presumed to be innocent until he has been found guilty. That is the restraint. But the restraint is not such a restraint as now proposed, and that is to condemn a man without, as the Senator has very correctly said, any charges having been preferred against him, and by the action of a committee that is as destitute of authority as an egg is of hair.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the able Senator from Louisiana. He has taken some of the words out of my mouth. Not the last ones; I had not thought of that comparison.

But, Mr. Secretary, I am so deadly in earnest about the proper, the fair, the right, and the just procedure that I say if a comparison is going to be made with a criminal case, then I shall demand that those making the comparison go on further and indulge this man with the same presumption of innocence that they would grant to one charged with murder or any other heinous offense. But no, they will not do that. They say to Mr. BILBO, "Stop. Stop now." It was even reported in the newspapers that "We can stop him at the door. We can stop him at the bar. We can stop him any place if we have the votes."

I trust that report is untrue. I trust that at no time will it ever be said that in this body any party in power will stop someone from taking the oath merely because it has the votes to stop him. That sentiment derives from power and power alone. It is a denial of justice. It is a condemnation of the innocent. It is in derogation of every fundamental right of America and her citizens.

Mr. Secretary, I had not intended to take any time at all. I merely wanted to make clear that in voting yesterday and in voting today I am not supporting the Senator-elect from Mississippi; I am not dealing with his guilt or with his innocence.

At the proper time, when he has had his hearing, when he has been accorded the fair treatment he is entitled to have, when the proper committee has reported to this body, then the Senate should act on his case. I say frankly, if the statements made in the report of the committee are true, and if they are sustained, I shall as unhesitatingly vote to exclude him from this Chamber as I now demand without hesitation that he be accorded and given his fair, decent, right and just deserts in this body. That fundamental justice which I urge today can only be meted out now by letting the Senator from Mississippi go down to the bar, raise his hand, and take his oath, and remain as a Senator until the charges have been made, the evidence has been taken, the decision as to his guilt has been rendered by this body.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. Secretary, I desire to associate myself with the statement just made by the Senator from New Mexico. I completely concur in it. He has stated my position on the vote of yesterday, and he has stated my position on the votes which are to come in the future on this question. He has stated my position more eloquently than I myself could have stated it; and I wish to concur and associate myself in all he has said on the subject.

The question before us is as simple as it could be. The question is whether we are to give the accused an opportunity to stand here and contend against his accusers on an equal basis. The question is whether he is to be given his fair day in court. That is all I ask that he be given. After that, unless there are some explanations of some of the accusations, I shall not hesitate to vote, if the evidence justifies it, that he is not qualified to sit in the Senate.

All the questions which have been raised were before the Senate when Senator BILBO was a Member of this body. He could have been expelled during the previous session if he were guilty of those things. We did not have to wait until the next election. The Senate knew about them. The Senate heard Senator BILBO make the statements which he made, and they were not challenged by the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator contend that the Senate had knowledge of the facts obtained by the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, which facts are set forth in the report and the printed hearings now on the desks of Senators?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not know how much knowledge the Senate has today of any facts concerning Senator BILBO. I do not know of any knowledge that anyone has of those facts. But certainly the things which are supposed to have happened occurred while Senator BILBO was a Member of this body.

I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that Senator BILBO has been a Member of this body for 12 years. Senators have been associated with him. They have known his position on all questions. If the Senate had wanted to expel him, it could have attempted to expel him before.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. In fairness, the RECORD should show that I do not believe that the Senate had knowledge of what is contained in the testimony and the report of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, which testimony and report are now officially a part of the records of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to ask the Senator a question. As I have previously stated, I do not know how much knowledge the Senate now has; but does the Senator wish to give Senator BILBO the opportunity of standing before his accusers, with the same rights which the accusers have, or does he wish to place Senator BILBO in an inferior position so that he cannot reply to the accusations which are made against him by Members of the Senate? Is the Senator afraid of Senator BILBO? Does he wish to bar him at the door and place him in an inferior position? It seems to me that no other conclusion can be reached. Senator BILBO would gain no rights by taking the oath of office at this time.

Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. MCMAHON addressed the Chair.

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan. He was first on his feet.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understand that a question has been directed to the Senator from Michigan, and I am very glad to answer it.

As I see the question before the Senate, it is this: Senator BILBO would have the right to be sworn in if there were no evidence before the committee to rebut that right, if there were no evidence bringing to the attention of the Senate the facts now before the Senate, which disqualify him from becoming a Senator. He should have a fair trial, but he should not ask to come into the Senate and change the rule. Many Senators will contend that the minute he becomes a Member of the Senate by taking the oath, a two-thirds vote will be required to oust him from the Senate. I do not agree with that view, but I know that it is held by many Senators. The rights of Senators should not be interfered with. Senator BILBO should not be permitted to change his status and become a Member of the Senate, when a two-thirds vote would be required to expel him.

Some Senators will contend that section 3 of article I of the Constitution requires only three things in the nature of qualifications, namely, that a man be 30 years of age, that he shall have been for 9 years a citizen of the United States, and that he be a resident of the State which sends him to the Senate. It is said that those are the only qualifications. I do not agree with that view. There is an absolute mandate that no man may become a Senator who does not have those qualifications; but when we turn to section 5 of article I of the Constitution, we find that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members. The Constitution uses the word "judge." The Senate is the judge of the qualifications of its Members.

That is the question which faces us. We are the judges. We have the right to determine the qualifications of Members of this body. The evidence now before Senators should lead them to the conclusion that there is such a stain on his record and such a disqualification of Senator BILBO to become a United States Senator that he should not be sworn in.

I wish to cite a few lines which Daniel Webster quoted in this body, because I think they are pertinent. They come from a member of Parliament. Under these conditions it would be absurd to say that the oath must be administered, to be followed by a hearing—the evidence already having been gathered—and then an expulsion. That would seem to be a rather ridiculous performance. The irrational character of such a proceeding is pictured by an old member of Parliament whose verse is more expressive than poetical.

The following was quoted by Mr. Webster:

> I hear a lion in the lobby roar!
> Say, Mr. Speaker, shall we shut the door
> And keep him out, or shall we let him in
> And see if we can get him out again?

[Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The SECRETARY. The occupants of the galleries will maintain order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. Secretary, I consider the statement of the Senator from Michigan only a flimsy excuse.

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall speak later upon this subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I believe the Senator is afraid to face Senator BILBO on equal terms in the Senate on the question involved. The statement that some Senators may believe this, and other Senators may believe something else, is only a flimsy, inconsequential excuse, and an attempt to evade the real issue which is before us. As I previously stated, Senator BILBO can gain nothing by taking the oath of office.

Mr. OVERTON and Mr. MCMAHON addressed the Chair.

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield first to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Secretary, I think the argument just advanced by the Senator from Michigan is one of the most illogical arguments I have heard presented in a case which is replete with illogical arguments. The Senator admits that if BILBO were sworn he could not be excluded except by compulsion, requiring a two-thirds vote. So, in order to circumvent a provision of our Constitution, he says, "Expel him before he gets into the Chamber."

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MCMAHON. The Senator from Colorado stated that Senator BILBO would gain nothing by taking his seat. Do I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is my contention. Senator BILBO is either qualified or he is not qualified; and taking the oath of office does not qualify him to sit here if the Senate decides by a majority vote that he is not qualified and cannot sit here.

Mr. MCMAHON. But during the interim the Senator will admit that his name would be called on roll calls and he would have the right to vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, and that is the very privilege which the Senator from Colorado extended to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] when charges were made against him.

Mr. MCMAHON. We might run into such a situation as that which the Senate encountered in the Newberry case. Senator Newberry had voted perhaps 150 times, and on some of the questions on which he voted decided vital issues of our times, because some of his votes were cast with reference to the League of Nations. After he had cast 150 votes Mr. Newberry was expelled from the Senate. Ab initio he had no right to cast a vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Newberry was not expelled from the Senate.

Mr. MCMAHON. I accept the correction of the Senator from Georgia. When he knew that a sufficient number of Senators had been elected to expel him, rather than fight the case for 2 years more and remain until the end of his term, knowing the fate that awaited him, he resigned immediately.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is unreasonable to think that Senator BILBO, by himself, can stall off consideration of his fate. It rests with the majority of the Senate to decide how they want to proceed. I recall that consideration of Senator LANGER'S case by the Senate required more than a year, which I thought was an extremely long time in which to investigate his case; but the majority of the Senate, as is clearly to be perceived by the so-called test vote taken yesterday, cannot be depended upon to defend Senator BILBO or anyone else unless he has an incontestable case. So it is foolish to talk about letting this man take his seat for fear that we will not be able to get him out, and that the whole country is going to rack and ruin because of his vote. That is perfectly silly in view of the huge majority which the majority party has at this time.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does not the Constitution provide that every State is entitled to be represented by two Senators?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It does. Of course, the effect of this proceeding is to deprive the State of that representation. That is the substance of what it really does. But the point I wish to make clear is that the whole controversy revolves around one point, and that is whether the accused is to have an equal right with his accusers to stand up in this body, a body in which he has held membership for 12 years; whether he is to have the same right as his accusers in answering the accusations against him. That is the whole thing. Nothing else is involved.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. Secretary, I think everyone in the Senate knows of the personal relationship between Senator BILBO and myself. Regardless of what that relationship is, he is entitled to justice and the State of Mississippi is entitled to have its constitutional rights recognized by the United States Senate.

Senator BILBO was fairly elected to the United States Senate. He was elected in an election in which there was no fraud and no coercion. Two committees of the Senate have investigated him. One of those committees had jurisdiction of the subject matter and the power to make definite recommendations to the Senate. The report of that committee exonerated him of wrongdoing, in that it held that the statements made in the campaign did not deprive citizens of their constitutional right to vote. The other committee is the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

It has been charged that he has personally profited from dealings with contractors. These charges, if true, are a reflection not only upon him, but a reflection upon the State of Mississippi and her people. He is entitled and the State is entitled to have an investigation, and a trial, made by a properly constituted committee of the Senate, with full supervision of the subject matter and with the power and the duty to make definite recommendations to this body. The Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, with all deference, had no such authority; and, in addition, that committee did not attempt in its report to make definite recommendations to this body. That is a right to which every man who presents himself to the bar of the Senate is entitled. It is a right to which the State of Mississippi is entitled. Credentials in proper order—and Senator BILBO's credentials are in proper order—prima facie give him a right to a seat in this body.

The Constitution provides that the State of Mississippi is entitled to two Senators on the floor of the Senate to represent the State at all times. This proceeding will deprive Mississippi of that right, and will deprive one who has been elected of the right of trial by a proper committee with authority to make recommendations to the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator think that on the pending motion the Senator from Maine is entitled to a seat without waiting? The issue before the Senate is whether or not we shall swear in a Senator whose seat is uncontested.

Mr. EASTLAND. I disagree with the Senator. The real issue before the Senate is whether or not Senator BILBO should be seated. The Senator well knows that and the Senate well knows it.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. The question is whether or not Senator BILBO shall hold a seat in the Senate while the issue is being determined. There is no disposition not to give the Senator a perfectly square deal. Whether he stays in the Senate or not has nothing to do with the square deal he receives.

Mr. EASTLAND. A trial by whom?

Mr. TAFT. By a duly constituted committee of the Senate for that purpose. That is a question to be determined later. The only question now is whether the Senator shall be sworn in.

Mr. EASTLAND. Just a moment. The Senator from Ohio says whether or not he shall be given a trial by a duly constituted committee is a question to be determined later?

Mr. TAFT. No matter what action is taken now the Senator will be given a complete trial on all charges, I suppose, before the Rules Committee. That is the proper committee to determine it. There is no disposition not to give him a square deal. We have the narrow question, Shall a man charged with heinous crimes be sworn in pending a determination of the question whether he shall be a Senator of the United States? That question has been decided in different ways by the Senate. In 10 cases the Senate decided that certain Senators should not be seated; in 9 cases that they should be seated.

As I see it, the Senator is objecting because he thinks the Senate is going to decide against his view of the matter. The Senator is insisting that the Senate be not organized, that none of the other Senators be sworn in, until, through a species of forced action we are compelled to adopt the Senator's view as to whether a Senator shall be sworn in pending the determination of the question.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator is certainly wrong. I am not arguing as to the credentials of any Senator. All I say is that Mr. BILBO's credentials are in proper order and he is entitled to be seated, and then that he be investigated by a proper committee with the power and duty to make definite recommendations to this body.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator's position is that the status quo of the Senate be maintained until the whole question can be tried. The Senator insists as a condition of the organization of the Senate, the condition of giving 35 States the complete representation to which they are entitled, that we change that status quo and accept one view on a very disputed question, and seat Senator BILBO and have him sworn in as a Senator. The Senate ought to have the right to decide that question. The effect of the procedure preventing the swearing in of the other Senators is to deny the Senate the right to have a majority determine what it is going to do on a question which certainly is controversial and on which people can take either side.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator well knows that during that time the State of Mississippi would be deprived of its constitutional right of being represented by two Senators.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The State of Mississippi has no right to be represented by two Senators if one of them has not the qualifications of a Senator.

Mr. EASTLAND. But he was elected without fraud, and his credentials are in order. I am not saying that there should not be a trial. I think there should be a trial by a proper body; but I do not think he should be excluded except on the report of a committee that would have the power to make definite recommendations.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. I take it that if Mr. BILBO is sworn in, he becomes a duly qualified Senator in every respect. I wish to know whether in those circumstances he would be entitled to participate in the trial—I call it a trial, for want of a better word—and would be privileged not only to speak in his own behalf but to vote in his own behalf. Is that true?

Mr. EASTLAND. Frankly, I do not know about voting in his behalf, and I do not desire to debate that point. But certainly he would be entitled to speak in his own behalf.

Mr. WHITE. That question was preliminary to my real question. If he is admitted and takes the oath of office, does he not then have every title which every other Member has to his seat and to his position as a Senator of the United States; and would he not, on the conclusion of the hearings, regardless of whether he participated in the hearings, be privileged to vote on his own case?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary——

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I am just reminded that there is somewhere a prohibition against having any Senator participate in any proceeding in which he has an interest.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, there is no constitutional provision to that effect, as I recall.

Mr. HATCH. There is a rule or something of the sort.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is in the records of the Senate a case in which a Senator was permitted to be sworn in notwithstanding the fact that a question was raised as to whether he was entitled to be seated; and he became a Member of the Senate. When the question was finally voted upon, he voted in his own behalf, and his vote decided the question in his behalf in the Senate, and he was seated. Subsequently a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which he had been retained. The fact that he voted for himself on the previous vote evidently influenced some Senators when they voted again; and although he voted for himself a second time, nevertheless he was denied a seat in the Senate, largely, I think, because he had exercised the right to vote for himself on the first occasion.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. So far as I am concerned, I certainly shall join in a motion, supported by all the precedents, to permit Mr. BILBO to speak in his own behalf to any reasonable extent. Of course, if he becomes a Member of the Senate he may speak in his own behalf here all day, and every day; and I do not think we are required to give him that privilege to that extent.

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not think his physical condition would permit that.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think we should try to make the issue clear, as it stands today. The debate is taking place upon a motion to administer the oath to Senator-elect OWEN BREWSTER, of Maine.

Therefore, by this debate we are not permitted to organize the Senate and to swear in 35 Senators, because some of the Senators—and I think the RECORD of yesterday showed conclusively that it was merely some of them—insist that we shall swear in the Senators in alphabetical order, because the next name after that of Senator BALDWIN would be that of Senator BILBO, and that unless we surrender to that demand and swear in Senator BILBO next, the Senate cannot organize itself. To my mind, that is the question presented to the Senate today.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. Secretary, I yielded for a question, not for a speech.

The fact is that Senator BILBO's name is not now before us, because the motion was tabled, and not because of any act of his supporters.

As the Senator from New Mexico so well stated, every man is presumed innocent until proved guilty by a court of competent jurisdiction. I do not think anyone would state that this committee had proper jurisdiction. As I have stated, the committee did not even make definite recommendations to the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. In just a moment I shall be through.

Senator BILBO is entitled to that right. His credentials are in order. He is entitled to be seated, and then the proper committee should investigate the case, should give him his rights, and the Senate should take action.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. I simply wished to ask a question, namely, whether the Senator from Mississippi contends, in connection with the last part of his remarks, that the Senate cannot act upon facts that have not been proved in a case in court or upon which a man has not been convicted in a court. The Senator from Mississippi does not mean to infer that; does he?

Mr. EASTLAND. What the Senator from Mississippi meant was that every man who presents himself to the bar of the Senate, before he is prevented from taking his seat, should have the right of trial by a committee with jurisdiction over the subject matter and with the power to make definite recommendations in the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Secretary, there appears to be precedent in the Senate, in the Smith case, from Illinois.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. Secretary, I yielded for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. In answer to the Senator's statement that the States are entitled to complete representation in the Senate I should like to ask him whether it has occurred to him that one of the grandest States in the Union, possessing some of the richest historic traditions and having made to America contributions of inestimable value is completely without representation in the Senate of the United States today. I refer to the great State of Virginia. The tactics of discussing here at length on this floor a matter which is not even before the Senate at this time is preventing that magnificent State from any representation at all in the Senate.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. Secretary, there is no filibuster in progress, but the present condition is something that is not of our making.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Senator from Mississippi has been saying that Senator BILBO should be entitled to a fair trial by a duly constituted committee. That is exactly what the resolution I presented calls for, namely, that the matter be referred to a committee.

Mr. EASTLAND. That resolution has been tabled; and it was tabled, in part, by the vote of the Senator from Idaho. He himself voted against his own resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR. It will be brought up again on Monday.

Mr. EASTLAND. I suppose the Senator from Idaho will vote against it again on Monday.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. Secretary, a few minutes after the Senate convened yesterday I entertained the hope that the majority in the Senate would at least afford a Senator-elect the opportunity to take his oath of office without attempting to bar him at the door. As has been stated during the debate this morning, there are on file in the Senate today the credentials of a Senator-elect from the great State of Mississippi. I have been a Member of this body for the past 10 years, during that time when, in a lawful and regular manner, charges have been preferred against a Senator-elect the method employed has been to permit him to be sworn in without prejudice, so that he would be given an opportunity to defend himself.

The course now being followed is not one against BILBO; it is a slap at the sovereign State of Mississippi. Today that great State is entitled to be represented in the Senate by two Senators, but on yesterday, when I noticed the gestapo methods which were sought to be employed by the majority party in seating new Senators, by starting at the bottom, the last letter of the alphabet, instead of the first, I realized that they would not accede to the request which I hoped would be complied with, namely, that Senator BILBO be sworn in without prejudice.

Oh, it is said Senators on the other side want to give Senator BILBO a fair trial. The fair trial some of them want to give him is to slit his throat from ear to ear. How can he expect a fair trial?

I quote from a newspaper article which appeared in the Evening Star under date of December 30 which gives some of the reasons why. This is a quotation from my distinguished friend the Senator-elect from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. The headline is:

BREWSTER backs move to bar BILBO at door when Senate meets.

The article proceeds:

Senator BREWSTER, Republican, of Maine, announced today he is joining Senator FERGUSON, Republican, of Michigan, in a demand that Republicans attempt to bar Senator BILBO, Democrat, of Mississippi, at the door when the Senate convenes Friday.

"The country—

This is Senator BREWSTER talking—

"The country expects us to act now on BILBO," Senator BREWSTER declared. "We ought to try to stop him at the door. If the Democrats want to filibuster and prevent the organization of the Senate, that is their responsibility."

Speaking for myself, I accept that challenge.

I shall now read from an editorial from the Washington Post, in its issue of January 3, entitled "Report on BILBO." I shall not read all the editorial, but only that part which I think is pertinent to the issue I am now discussing.

The paragraph preceding the one I will read refers to certain actions which may be taken by the Department of Justice. I quote:

But before the Department takes action he must be ejected from a privilege which is not his due—membership in the Senate of the United States. We believe that Senator BILBO is disqualified for membership in the Senate on the ground that he was not validly elected to it as well as on the ground of moral turpitude. Perhaps it does not much matter on which ground he is challenged and ejected. But we cannot help feeling that Senator TAFT'S statement on the subject was ill-considered and unfortunate—if he meant it to apply to final determination of the Bilbo case.

I now quote the language of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] which is referred to in the editorial:

You can stop him at the door any way you want to if you have the majority vote—

Senator TAFT was quoted as declaring Wednesday.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I quote further:

You can do it on any grounds you want to, or even without giving any grounds. All you need are the votes.

There is no man in the Senate I admire more than I do the Senator from Ohio. I do not know that he made that statement; I do not know what thought he had in the back of his head, when he made it, if he did make it, but if he desires now to explain it, he may have the opportunity.

I read further from the editorial:

This seems to us a pernicious doctrine susceptible of perilous abuse by intemperate majorities. Men who have a prima facie claim, as has Senator BILBO, to a seat in the Senate ought not to be denied it on anything less than compelling evidence of election frauds or of gross moral unfitness. In the case of Senator BILBO, exclusion or expulsion should be solidly based on the evidence which so clearly and abundantly warrants such action.

Mr. Secretary, of what are the Republicans afraid? What are they insisting on at this time? Are they hesitating because of the fact that permitting BILBO to be sworn in will entitle him to one vote when they themselves would have 15 or 16 new Members in the Senate? As was said by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], Senator BILBO should by all means be permitted to take the oath, and then if charges are made legally, refer them to the proper committee, and let the committee give the accused the opportunity to defend himself. Under present conditions, and in view of the manner and method in which the press of the Nation has dealt with this case, many people throughout the country have been misguided, not by virtue of evidence properly adduced, but by reports, many of which were tainted reports.

To recur to the question of a "fair trial," I read yesterday an article emanating from Walter Winchell, in which he said it was rumored that the distinguished Senator from Michigan was "after BILBO's scalp," and that he would impeach him. The acts complained of took place in 1945, while Senator BILBO was a Member of the Senate. I ask, Why was it, if the special committee, or any members of it, were in possession of such evidence, they did not then and there perform their duty by bringing charges against BILBO and placing him on trial? No; they did not do that. They waited until the election.

Let us be perfectly frank. "Bilboism" was preached all over the New England States and all over the Northern States during the last campaign. I heard many speeches over the radio condemning "Bilboism." What is "Bilboism"?

Senator BILBO has been one of the few Senators on this floor to speak his mind. He is a man who has the courage of his convictions. He has led the fight, on many occasions, against the antilynching bill. I helped him, as did many other southerners. If he is to be condemned for that, so am I; for I helped him, as did the others.

When he opposed the antilynching bill, he of course trampled on the toes of many colored people throughout the North. Today there are in the North a few small, miserable groups, here and there, who pretend to be trying to help the Negroes of the South, when as a matter of fact, what they are trying to do is to help themselves.

It is a known fact that in the North there are eight pivotal States that have so many colored people in them that, as the colored vote goes, so goes an election. I contended on the floor of the Senate, during the filibuster against the antilynching, poll tax, and other measures, that that situation was the real issue behind those bills.

Evidence was adduced here to show that no other crime in the annals of criminology had been wiped out so quickly as the crime of lynching. From a high of over 300 we had in the last 3 or 4 years a low of 1 or 2 lynchings within the country; and yet, in the face of the decrease, there are these little groups here and there preying on other groups, to foster legislation of this kind, in order to carry out the views of the smaller groups. I have no doubt in my mind that it is because of Senator BILBO's fight and because of his attitude on that issue that the press of the Nation and various misled groups throughout the Nation have been "after his scalp," as it were.

When the poll-tax bill was discussed before the Senate, Senator BILBO always spearheaded the movement to defeat the bill. I was with him, although my State levies no poll taxes. I felt that the proper way to eliminate the poll tax was through the State legislatures. That was my position, that was Senator BILBO's position, and that was the position of most of the Senators who fought that bill. In opposing that bill Senator BILBO of course incurred the enmity of certain subversive groups throughout the country, many of which are preying on a large segment of our southern population, the Negroes. We have in the South 76 percent of all the colored people of the United States, and yet the North has been trying to tell us what to do about them. Senator BILBO, by his attitude toward that bill, has of course aroused the animosity of many people, of many groups, and those groups are today behind the effort that is being put forth to deny him his seat in the Senate.

Senator BILBO spearheaded the move to kill another bill, the so-called FEPC bill. I was with him in that move, which brought about a lively fight on the Senate floor. I am sure that Senator BILBO's attitude respecting that bill, the valiant fight he put up in his endeavor to kill the bill, has made many groups throughout the country very angry, including, I am sure, some of his colleagues in the Senate. I am satisfied that those groups are today behind the movement to deny Senator BILBO his seat in the Senate. I have no doubt about that. I am sure that many Senators have been visited in the past and have been visited recently by many leaders of those groups, who have demanded that Senator BILBO be thrown out of the Senate, and who have threatened what they will do if he is not thrown out.

A committee was organized in the city of New York with which I am sure all Senators are familiar, the Civil Rights Congress, which issued a great deal of literature dealing with Senator BILBO. That committee was called the Oust BILBO Committee. In other words, before the man was given a trial, before he was given an opportunity to appear before the Senate and defend himself, it was the desire of the members of that committee that he be thrown out of the Senate. I am told there are some good men on that committee. How they permit themselves to be misled by termites who are eating from the inside, who are misleading the members of the committee, I simply cannot understand.

I have no doubt that that group, as well as many other groups scattered throughout this broad land of ours, are behind this movement to stop BILBO, and why? I say to the Members of the Senate, that these groups are behind this movement, not because of the man himself, not because of what he has done and with what he has been charged by the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, but because of the views Senator BILBO holds. These minority groups have been after his scalp because they are of the impression that he has been in their way in the Senate. I wish to say to the Members of the Senate that when the pressure vultures have picked clean the bones of Senator BILBO their insatiable appetite for blood will not be satisfied until they find another victim or victims of the same standing, men who might think as Senator BILBO does. Who might such victims be? One might be my distinguished friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. One might be my distinguished colleague from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. One might be myself, because I entertain the same views. I wish to say to the Members of the Senate that I am firm in my convictions, and, so far as I am concerned, I propose to speak on the issues involved as I think about them, and as I have spoken in the past. If I have to be a martyr to the cause, I shall be, and I shall be happy in the realization that I have done my duty to my God and to my country.

I have tried to point out the attitude of Senator BILBO respecting the bill providing for the establishment of a Fair Employment Practice Committee. As all Senators know, that bill had as its object the creation of a committee which could, without giving an employer the right to go into court, force the employment of a certain number of colored people, a certain number of Jews, a certain number of Christians, a certain number of Chinese, and so on. Senator BILBO opposed that measure.

Senator BILBO also opposed the bill providing for the establishment of a minimum wage, as that measure was first introduced. The minimum-wage bill, as it was first introduced, contained a clause which would create a bureau having full power to go into an employer's business, classify every job in that business, and then fix wages beginning at the point where Congress had left off. If the two bills, against which Senator BILBO and I and other Senators so violently fought, had been passed, we would have had one committee telling the employers of this Nation whom to employ, and an administrator telling them how much they should pay. Of course, we opposed those two measures, because, as I said on the Senate floor, if those bills had been passed we might as well hang crepe on the doors of enterprise. We opposed those measures. Of course, the groups which favored the two bills, and the other bills to which I have referred, are now after BILBO's scalp. They have joined with other groups in their efforts to bar BILBO from the Senate. That is what is back of this fight, and nothing else.

Does anyone wonder why so much attention has been paid in the last 4 or 5 years to whatever Senator BILBO did? Regardless of what he said in the Senate it was quoted. When it was disclosed that in a letter to a lady in New York he had addressed as "Dear Dago," reams of paper were utilized throughout the country to advertise that fact, to talk about and discuss it. Why? The reason why that was done was that for the past 4 or 5 years there has been a consistent effort made by many groups to build a case against Senator BILBO. The same groups participated to some extent in the Mississippi election. They are now knocking on the doors of the Senate insisting that Senator BILBO, although he has been duly elected, be denied his seat.

Mr. Secretary, why should the election of Senator BILBO have become so important all over the world? I returned from a world trip in August. I was abroad during the election in Mississippi. In newspapers in the Philippines, China, Egypt, Greece, and other countries I saw countless articles, and a large number of pictures of Senator BILBO addressing crowds in Mississippi. Why should that be? Why should so much interest be created in this man's election? Why should Life magazine, Time, and other publications have sent many editors and photographers to the State of Mississippi at great cost in order to follow the campaign of Senator BILBO? I should like to know the answer. There has been a concerted endeavor on the part of certain groups to start with BILBO, because they felt that he was the most vulnerable. As I stated a while ago, if they should succeed in throwing him out, other Members of the Senate who share his views had better look out.

Those groups are not fooling anyone. The same groups which for the past 4 years, have been fighting Senator BILBO and what he stands for are behind this movement. But instead of having the courage to come to the Senate and say, "Throw him out because of his views on the poll-tax bill," they have camouflaged the issue. They have wrapped it in a neat package and have labeled it, "Throw him out because he has accepted a Cadillac and a few pieces of furniture." Instead of having the courage to come before the Senate and say, "Throw Senator BILBO out because of his views on FEPC," what are they doing? They are saying, "Throw him out because he has illegally collected funds to build a church and parsonage." Instead of coming before the Senate and saying, "Throw him out because of his views on the antilynching bill," they are saying, "Throw him out because he accepted the offer of a contractor to paint his house." Instead of saying to the Senate, "Throw him out because of his views on the minimum-wage bill and other legislation against which he has fought," they are saying, "Throw him out because he engaged a contractor to build a lake and a swimming pool on his farm."

That is what is happening. These charges have been before the people of Mississippi for many years. They were discussed during the last campaign. They were known for 3 or 4 years. In fact, the record shows that many of them were known not long after the events are alleged to have occurred. With that knowledge, why were not efforts made then to oust him? The march is on to destroy southern traditions which are as deeply rooted as the giants of the forest. If Senator BILBO is toppled, we shall see what will happen to other Senators who hold the same views which he has the courage and the wisdom to entertain and express.

The pressure groups which are now advocating the causes which I have tried to define or explain, in reference to the poll tax, the FEPC, and other issues, will be back here. They will plague every Senator and every Member of the other House. I am not an old man, but in my lifetime I have seen many politicians cringe and cower like a belabored hound beneath his master's leash when confronted by groups asking that this or that be done, "else we will send you to political oblivion."

With such pressure groups permeating the Capitol at Washington ever since I have been here, I can really and truly say that I am fearful that representative government is at stake. The people of this Nation expect their representatives to use their God-given common sense and judgment in deciding the issues which come before them. They do not expect us to be intimidated by any group into doing the bidding of selfish pressure groups who look to themselves, who look through the big end of the telescope to find out where they come in, without in any manner evaluating the effect of their proposals upon other groups.

I am very hopeful that new Senators, as well as many older Senators, will give heed to what I have said because they will be plagued. For the good of our country, for the good of our citadel of democracy, I hope that all of us will follow our own inclinations, our own views, and use our good, common horse sense in deciding what should or should not be done.

I am somewhat disappointed. I have said it before, but it may not have hit the mark at the time. There has been in this country in the past 10 years or more a fight between the two great political parties to capture the colored vote, to capture votes of minorities. These groups are insatiable. We can satisfy them for a time, as the Democrats did for 14 years, but whenever we cease giving, or whenever things no longer happen as they expect, see what occurs at the polls.

In the recent campaign of Senator BILBO, as I tried to point out a while ago, brand-new tactics were employed, tactics which I believe were not resorted to in any other State.

As a rule, press representatives, photographers, and radiomen are about the only ones following a candidate around in a State, giving the other parts of the country the news of what is happening in the election which is going on in that State.

As I indicated a while ago, during the last campaign in Mississippi, Life magazine was represented by a score of photographers and many writers. Some of the largest newspapers in the country were represented. Stories were published about Senator BILBO, and I am sure that many of them were tinged with prejudice. Such stories were published throughout the country.

That, to my way of thinking, is what has caused many good people to take the attitude which they are now assuming against Senator BILBO. Senator BILBO's opponents have succeeded pretty well in advertising his election and in giving the people a great deal of misinformation which, in my humble opinion, is responsible for much of the effort which is now being exerted to throw the distinguished Senator-elect from Mississippi out of the Senate.

I am just as sure as that I am standing before the Senate today that during the campaign in the State of Mississippi, except for the outside influence that was brought to bear, BILBO might have had a hard time being reelected. BILBO has been Governor of his State for three terms; he has been Lieutenant Governor for one term; he has been in the Senate for 12 years. A man with such a long life in politics—I do not care where he comes from—is bound to have many political enemies within his State.

Long before the election last July I was told by some very prominent citizens of the State of Mississippi that they thought they had BILBO this time. But lo and behold, when outside influence began to come into Mississippi, when Walter Winchell and the great Drew Pearson began to write about BILBO; when Time magazine sent its representatives there; when they advocated the defeat of BILBO; when they began to talk about giving the colored people the vote, and all that, the people of Mississippi simply became angry and sent BILBO back to us. That is what happened. If it had not been for the outside influence and the resentment that the people of Mississippi felt because of such outside influence, BILBO might have had a great deal of trouble, because, as I have said, a man so long in politics is bound to have many political enemies.

I dislike to say it—I may be all wrong, and I hope I am—but the same groups will be knocking at the doors of the Eightieth Congress from the time the Senate is organized until 2 years from now. Watch them. They will be back. I am warning Senators. They had better do their bidding, else they may suffer at their hands.

The great Republican Party is now in power, and I was hopeful that it would make a good start. For many years it has been criticizing what the Democrats have done. The Republican Party should go after big game, and quit shooting sparrows. Republican Senators have said on many occasions that this, that, or the other ought to be done. Let them go to it, and God bless them.

I cannot help but express disappointment in many of my colleagues across the aisle who are insisting on the course which they are now pursuing. I hope that before this debate is over they will change their minds.

This morning I received a letter in the mail which I think is quite appropriate, and I should like to read it. Strange as it seems, this letter discusses some of the points which I have been attempting to make. I am not acquainted with the membership of the association from which the letter comes, but it is organized under an act of Congress of July 14, 1933, and it is the Allied Veterans' Political Association of America. I presume that every Member of the Senate has received a letter like the one I hold in my hand, because it is addressed to the Members of the United States Senate, and is dated at New York City, December 31, 1946. It reads as follows:

THE ALLIED VETERANS POLITICAL ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
December 31, 1946.

Re Senator BILBO.

To the Members of the United States Senate:

Who rules America? Is Congress already yielding allegiance to the purse strings of communism? Is communism so strongly entrenched in the high places of this land that he who refuses to serve them must be eliminated? Why should communism seek to unseat Senator BILBO? For the past several years BILBO has been an outstanding opponent of communism. His name is high on the must-eliminate list of communism. To attack and oust BILBO is to silence other Senators and to make them amenable to direct control—to intimidate them. The Communists organized a purge during the recent political campaign. The purpose of that purge, overtly conducted in the CIO and PAC groups, was to defeat those politicians and others who were outspoken against communism. BILBO was not defeated. Public records disclose that CIO and PAC groups did not oppose any Member of Congress who had not openly voiced antagonism against the Communist Party.

On December 26, 1945, a letter was mailed to every Member of the Congress, and to other public officials. Headed "An appeal to the conscience of the House of Representatives,' the letter described the policy of the American Veterans Committee to control the veterans and play upon their emotions by inciting racial and religious antagonisms. Their method was that used by subversive and Communist groups—seeming championship of disaffected minority groups. This letter stated: "We know how absurd the appeals of religious and racial prejudices may be, but we also know (from sad experience) the actual crimes that have been the direct result of such appeals. The AVC alleges to fight the cause of persecuted groups. They build their power on the blind faith and loyalty of weaklings. Once convinced of AVC sincerity, these poor, misguided, but sincere, people follow those who appear to be fighting their battles for them. We cannot censure them. But, gentlemen of the Congress, this same blind faith and loyal support—no matter how sincerely intended, can create a very serious political crisis—a crisis that now bids fair to become the most destructive in our whole national history. They are organized and directed by a group of highly intelligent, experienced, and wealthy leaders—toward a well-planned objective. It is only when you and I, who know better, who are aware of the spurious nature of their cogent and specious pretense; it is only when you and I lose our heads and play cheap and dirty politics, when we forsake sincerity of purpose and the welfare of all the people, that we play right into their hands. We then find ourselves amidst strange bedfellows. God and Stalin or Satan cannot bed together. The gentlemen of Congress are familiar with the methods used by the Communists.

It is needless to cite the case of Senator THEODORE BILBO, of Mississippi—a sincere, loyal, and fine southern gentleman. Senator BILBO had spoken upon a subject which is of a very controversial nature; a subject to which he had given a great deal of close attention and real study. He had every right to express his opinion of that subject. Yet, communism crucifies him for doing so. While I do not necessarily subscribe to his opinions, my organization will fight to the limit for his right to express that opinion. In doing so, he stepped on the corns of certain groups—for the subject was one commonly used by Communists as a ready means of augmenting its power and membership. Under the leadership of the Communist Party, thousands of letters, highly inflammatory in nature, postmarked from every State in the Union, flooded the office of Senator BILBO. Those letters subjected BILBO to every conceivable form of vile anathema and vilification. He was criticized, cursed, and called unprintably filthy names. His secretary, Edward Terry, prepared replies to them, and, in righteous indignation, BILBO signed and permitted a few well-justified letters to go to remote sections of the Nation; to widely separated localities. However, we are now confronted by all of these letters, all assembled obviously, by one hand; all viciously used by that hand to re-create Senator BILBO as the persecutor of racial minorities. BILBO was goaded into a situation, and it is now being used as a cross to crucify him. Behind this whole campaign stands the sinister force of the Communist Party. You are being made party to their conspiracy. What they are now doing to Senator BILBO, they can and they will do to you. The Communists want to control our Government. They will stop at nothing to seize that control. Part of that control is vested in you. You, yourself, may be their next victim. Even your most cautious defenses will be as futile as those of BILBO, and avail you nothing in your trial.

Proof of what was then written to Congress is amply shown in the parade of events before your Senate committee investigating the BILBO case. There, Ed Terry, the confidential secretary of Senator BILBO, boldly admits that, on September 15, 1945, he accepted from a wealthy Communist leader (Simon Liberfeld) $15,000 in cash, to be used by him for the purpose of defeating in the election, his own employer. He was promised an additional $10,000. Observe, in this bribe, a tacit agreement to provide for Terry's own business future. Terry has revealed that the Communists are destroying BILBO, presumably to replace him with their henchman. You, the Senate, are duty bound to exhaustively investigate those other sums of money necessarily given to Terry to bribe him to effect BILBO's defeat. The Senate should ascertain just how many months prior to September 1945, this bribe taking was going on. Was Terry the immediate agent and cause of the widespread issuance of those inflammatory letters? Were the replies thereto, admittedly written by him and signed by BILBO, actually invented by Terry for use as part of this Communist scheme to disgrace BILBO and destroy him? This is the very crux and the essence of the entire investigation. Terry definitely links communism with the smear campaign against BILBO; it discloses the perpetrators of the cause of this investigation.

BILBO has submitted an acceptable explanation of every other fact involved in the inquiry.

Every Member of the Congress knows all too well—a secretary can make or break a Senator. A secretary has complete control of all correspondence. It is impossible for any Senator to read every letter arriving at, or emanating from, his office. That task is necessarily the function of the secretarial staff. Naturally, Senators must sign documents placed before them by a secretary—a person in whom he must have absolute confidence and faith—and usually with none or cursory scanning. Hence—when a secretary is bribed by the Communist Party to frame a Senator—that Senator is almost inevitably trapped. This procedure is merely one of the lesser phases of the familiar Communist procedure—boring from within with traitors.

The Senate should also investigate the other secretaries of Senators—and, for that matter, try to discover how many Senators are themselves involved in this Communist attempt to overthrow our Government by a policy of quietly permeating all subordinate channels. Have the Communists already acquired complete domination of a majority of our leaders themselves?

Show me a Senator who is not guilty of taking care of his constituents—and I will show you a legislator who will never be reelected to serve a second term. A legislator must first of all protect our Nation—and then fulfill the necessary obligations of his office to his constituents—by personal favors as well as by securing that legislation deemed requisite for local need, or of benefit to constituents directly. This is the commonly accepted procedure for perpetuating every legislator in office. You do it. Why blame BILBO then?

I have delineated an organized Communist attempt to oust BILBO. Does the Senate know of the exact word-for-word resolution urging impeaching of BILBO, simultaneously presented to the major veteran organizations all over America? Why identical? Why spontaneous—if not emanating from the same Communist source? A few veteran groups passed that resolution. It was presented in New York City and passed by some American Legion posts—but New York County threw it out as Communist inspiration—largely because of my analysis and opposition. Did these resolutions emanate from the same hand that dictated the inflammatory letters about BILBO? Was that hand Terry's? Through the 6-year war period, I was chairman of the American Legion Subversive Activities—un-American committee—in a strategic position to know the actual workings of the Communist-controlled groups in directing their slur-and-smear propaganda against Senator BILBO, as well as others. I knew what happened. Being a sociologist and a successful politician for many years—I could interpret it, too.

I sincerely maintain that Senator BILBO is an honest and upright legislator who in the main, has shown a much more discerning, long-range vision than most politicians. BILBO has shown no anti-Semetic, or anti-this or that—racial group tendencies. Nor has he ever shown any enmity for the Negro. His attitude is much like the sincere and far-seeing parent who is evading indulgence and pampering of every whim of his child in a very real effort to build for that child, a bright and promising future. Millions of our citizens agree with BILBO as to what constitutes Negro welfare. Curiously enough, the highest type Negro also agrees with BILBO's theories. Give the Negro the fullest opportunity for self-expression, educate and develop the best in his race to his optimum capacity, and allow them to live their own lives in their own way. BILBO, as does almost every white man, objects to 100 percent acceptance of the Negro into participation in private family lives and affairs. Many whites honestly believe in intermarriage with Negroes—but only if it is the other fellow whose sister or daughter intermarries. Invariably, the white or Negro girl who marries into the opposite race is an outcast in both races. Because of the unseen forces begot by group misuse and abuse of the championship of the rights of suffering minority groups, most people are reluctant to honestly express their views. In their hearts, they agree with BILBO; for social security, they tactfully conform and give lip service. There are many persons, as in New York City, who have never before been for or against any racial group. A New York mayor made the whites Negro-conscious and stirred up hatred for Negroes. That mayor imported the Negro for his ballot and put him on relief. Landlords, with houses tenanted by Negroes, found that courts would neither require the tenants to pay rent nor evict them. To avoid a complete loss of property, landlords razed their dwellings—and set up a housing shortage. Citizens are daily assaulted, robbed, and killed by Negro criminals, with the police turning an unseeing back knowing that to protect the citizen would be to lose their own jobs.

Forcing the Negro on the white is not building up a Negro future. You cannot teach, train, educate, guide, and develop the Negro by passing laws. BILBO is a keen, analytical student of sociology. He knows history. He is an authority on the race problem. BILBO has urged that the future of the Negro be assured by sane, sound, educational policies. He does not seek to nurture the spoiled and pampered brat. As a politician, he differs from that mayor of New York who cultivated the Negro to achieve certain personal political objectives. He does not want to protect the Negro in crime and injustice, nor train him to a life of cancerous social growth. BILBO has never refused the Negro the right to vote. If a State has set up socially acceptable conditions to which the Negro voter must conform if he is to vote, then that Negro must obey the law. Every voter has to conform to legal safeguards on the ballot. If Mississippi has set up certain regulations for declaring a change in party allegiance, then the Negro must conform to those regulations if he is to change his party.

The Republican Party has secured control of the Congress on probation. If they use that power to unseat BILBO, they will make a grievious and irreparable mistake. In effect, they are confirming the Democratic accusation of Republican complicity with communism. They are driving at one of the most fundamental of our constitutional rights—freedom of expression, freedom from fear, and freedom to think, feel, and act as God guides us to do. We can ill afford an American Stalin to pattern and to punctuate our thinking, feeling, and doing. The people of Mississippi elected BILBO. They like him. What right have we to dictate to the good people of Mississippi who is to represent them? If the thinking of a man as highly cultured, educated, and experienced as BILBO—whose extraordinary intelligence and political acumen has never been challenged—is not approved by subversive, minority groups, then it behooves the Senate to examine into the activities of those groups who persecute BILBO. Focus the spotlight of investigation on the persecutors—there is bribery and corruption there.

The critics of BILBO know little, and care less about the real racial needs of any minority group. They are not students, economists, sociologists. They are pandering to racial bigotry because it is a ready weapon to crucify BILBO, whose honestly expounded opinions chanced to be contrary to acceptance by certain small but active groups. His utterance was publicized, misquoted, and misinterpreted to serve as a flame to incite racial antagonisms. Then, with the cooperation of the racial bigots as a basis, Communists seek to eliminate BILBO by bribery and conspiracy. Terry seems to be well versed in these political machinations. He has placed himself in much the same category as a former New York mayor who rode to power on imported Negro votes. Then, in the flowering of political success, that mayor abandoned the Negroes to join another more fruitful issue. We are told that Terry now has a million-dollar credit with which to embark on housing construction. Was that million dollar credit authenticated by the same Communist who bribed him with an initial $15,000 to initiate BILBO's political downfall? One suspects $8,000 clerks who get millionaire credit. Is this million-dollar credit Terry's pay off? Is it the 30 pieces of silver?

It is certainly not the duty of the Senate, in its official investigation of allegations made against Senator BILBO, to fritter about on a witch hunt. But it is their plain duty to thoroughly investigate every pertinent factor developed in the investigation.

Terry, his admitted $15,000 bribe, his offer of additional funds, his succession to a vast money credit for entry into a highly paid construction activity—his sudden success and financial power after quitting a minor and low-wage position—all of this is very pertinent data. Every power of the Senate; every agency of our Government, should be called upon to explore the latent possibilities of criminal conspiracy lying therein.

Who is responsible for the demand that BILBO be subjected to the humiliation of an investigation by the Senate? Why was he denied the privilege of facing his accusors? What is the purpose of the Senate in clothing in silence the identities of those who are immediately responsible for an investigation of BILBO?

We think that Ed Terry can supply the answer to a lot of these questions. He should be compelled to do so. The person who gave Terry his $15,000—and unquestionably, many additional thousands of dollars to induce Terry to betray BILBO—that man did not come to Terry unknown and unsolicited. He was introduced to Terry by a mutual friend, and then only after Terry had been "sounded out" and expressed willingness to sell out. Terry should be forced to disclose all he knows about these persons who were instrumental in his betrayal of his employer. Those persons knew Terry—his weak points, his ability and willingness to "deliver." They knew how to approach him; how to lay the ground work and how to effect liaison between Terry and their own principles. No trustful, confidential secretary can be easily bribed or influenced unless some of his personal friends are "in on the take." Who were Terry's confederates in this conspiracy?

The United States Senate—through you, gentlemen—is itself on trial. It is up to the Senate to clean its own skirt of the contamination of communism—or to confess its firm allegiance to (and control by) communism. Every sincere and honest legislator who now investigates BILBO, is himself face to face with the same elimination policies by the same Communist Party power. What happens to BILBO, gentlemen, can happen to you.

America should not easily forget the bitter lesson learned in the downfall of Germany; the betrayal of France, Austria, and Poland. The conquest of these nations was not an overnight achievement by external forces alone. That conquest was the result of a long, patient, tedious, and insidious infiltration through the power of those "on the inside." The first conquest was that of the political leadership of the country. The first victory was betrayal by those who held places of power and trust—just such a place as you now hold. America faces that same insidious infiltration and domination at this moment. The Congress is an immediate objective. It is for the Congress to determine just how far and how successful this domination from without is to progress. It is for the Congress to decide when and how it is to end.

Who now rules America? In your investigation of Senator BILBO, you are answering this very pertinent question. The Senate is on trial as well as Senator BILBO.

President Roosevelt was accused of fraternizing with the Communists. Even intimidated newspapers both covertly and overtly describe Communist Party infiltration and control in Washington. It was because of the bureaucratic control of the Democratic Party, their Communistic alliances—that I, and many like me, organized reform groups. I incorporated the New Jersey State Democrats, and advocated the defeat of the Democratic Party so that a complete party purge would be effected. We must eliminate the Communists from American government and American political parties. But no citizen worthy of his American heritage expects the Republican Party to continue as the instrument to effect the objectives of the Communist Party. Your conduct in investigating BILBO is your declaration of purpose as to your stand on communism. My organization stands for the American principle of equality of opportunity for all, without discrimination between race, creed, or color.

Respectfully yours,

SAMUEL W. SILVERMAN,
National President.

Mr. Secretary, I am hopeful that that letter will be read by many Senators who do not at this time adorn the Senate by their presence. I believe the letter expresses good logic, and that in a measure it demonstrates what I was trying to point out to the Senate before I began to read it, namely, that there are in America today groups which have the ability to obtain as members some of the leading figures in America. Many such persons not only permit their names to be used on the committee letterheads but they furnished a considerable amount of the funds which make the machinery of such organizations operate. Nevertheless, many such organizations are operated by a species of termites who bore from the inside and who have been at work in this country for many years. They are now at work on many of the Members of this august body. Believe me when I say that if Senators do not support and further the principles and measures which some such organizations are now advocating and fostering, the organizations will make every attempt at their command to purge such Senators at the next election.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MORSE. I ask the Senator if he will yield, subject to the distinct understanding that he will not lose the floor thereby, in order that the junior Senator from Oregon may make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ELLENDER. Under those conditions, I gladly yield.

Mr. MORSE. I ask unanimous consent that the present Chairman pro tempore of the Senate be authorized to call to the chair, relieving him from duty in the chair, any Member of the Senate, for such period of time as he desires, subject to the condition that the Chairman pro tempore will keep himself within the precincts of the Senate, available to retake the chair at any time when any Member of the Senate requests that he do so, or take the chair at his own desire whenever he cares to. That is my unanimous-consent request.

I think it only fair that our Chairman pro tempore should be extended this courtesy, and it is not clear from the rules whether or not he can call a Senator to the chair. I do not think we should engage in any debate as to whether he can or cannot without unanimous consent. I think this courtesy should be extended to him. I think the request is a fair one, and I hope the Senate will unanimously join me in it.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. I do not have the floor. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor on the understanding that he would not lose the floor by yielding to me.

Mr. WHITE. On the understanding that it will not change the parliamentary situation or affect any question now pending, I am very glad to join with the Senator from Oregon in the request. I hope it will be granted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield under the same conditions.

Mr. HATCH. I have just entered the Chamber, and I heard a unanimous-consent request being proposed. I think I am in complete accord with it, but should there not be a quorum called?

Mr. MORSE. I have no objection.

Mr. WHITE. I see no necessity for it, but I should have no objection.

Mr. HATCH. May not the unanimous-consent agreement be stated again? I did not hear all of it.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oregon will restate the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MORSE. The unanimous-consent request is that the Chairman pro tempore of the Senate be authorized to call upon any Senator to take the chair and relieve him of his duty of presiding over the Senate for such period of time as he desires, subject to the condition and understanding that he will keep himself within the precincts of the Senate in order that he may be available to retake the chair at any time upon the request of any Member of the Senate; and with the further understanding that my unanimous-consent request, if granted, will not displace any business now pending before the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Secretary, I do not desire to suggest the absence of a quorum. I am in accord with the request.

The SECRETARY. Without objection, the request is agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. Secretary, I happened to be chairman of the Special Committee To Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946. The purpose of that committee is to investigate expenditures of all Senators during the recent campaign. Such a process has been going on for many years. Our committee has been fairly active since we organized last July. We have received a few complaints, some of them minor in character. We proceeded to investigate all complaints received by us which were worthy of being considered. Senate Resolution 224, pursuant to which the special committee was appointed, authorized the committee during the campaign to investigate any charges made against any Senator by any person interested within a State or by any citizen. The powers given the committee are very broad. Among the charges which were thrown into our laps was one over which the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program had taken jurisdiction, particularly with reference to the $25,000 contribution that was made to Senator BILBO for conducting a campaign.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SALTONSTALL in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to ask the Senator if he would object to my suggesting the absence of a quorum without prejudice to his right to the floor? I notice very few Senators are present.

Mr. ELLENDER. I refuse to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Senators may come into the Chamber in response to the roll call, but they may go out immediately thereafter, so it will not make any difference. I do not suppose many Senators are interested in what is now going on. Probably many of them are not anxious to know the facts. Of course, it may take a little time to give the facts to the Senate, and Senators will have ample opportunity to listen to me.

Mr. President, the form of the resolution providing for the appointment of this committee is about the same as that of resolutions which have been submitted in the Senate many times in the past. The resolution begins as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, from States in which no Senator is to be elected at the general election in 1946, is hereby authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to—

(1) the extent and nature of the expenditures made by all candidates for the office of the United States Senator in 1946 in connection with their campaigns for nomination and election to such office;

(2) the amounts subscribed and contributed, and the value of services rendered and facilities made available (including personal services, and the use of billboards and other advertising space, radio time, office space, moving-picture films, and automobiles and other transportation facilities), by any individual, group of individuals, partnership, association, or corporation to or on behalf of each such candidate in connection with any such campaign, or for the purpose of influencing the votes cast or to be cast at any primary or general election, or at any convention, held in 1946, at which a candidate for United States Senator is to be nominated or elected;

(3) the expenditure of funds appropriated by the Congress with a view to determining whether any such funds have been or are being expended by any department, independent agency, or instrumentality of the United States, by any State or political subdivision thereof, or by any instrumentality of any State or political subdivision thereof, in such a manner as to influence the votes cast or to be cast for any such candidate at any such primary or general election or convention;

(4) the use of any other means or influence (including the promise or use of patronage) for the purpose of aiding or influencing the nomination or election of any such candidates; and

(5) such other matters relating to the election of United States Senators in 1946, and the campaigns of candidates in connection therewith, as the committee deems to be of public interest, and which in its opinion will aid the Senate in enacting remedial legislation or in deciding any contests that may be instituted involving the right to a seat in the Senate.

I read the first section of the resolution to point out what the authority was. When the charge was made before our committee that Senator BILBO had received $25,000 back in 1942 for an election which was then in progress—that of Senator Wall Doxey—we placed the matter before our general counsel and he advised us that we had no jurisdiction to investigate those charges because they did not pertain to the campaign in which Senator BILBO was nominated; and therefore our committee saw fit not to proceed with any investigation of that subject.

As to our authority, as I indicated, the charges could be preferred not only by an opponent of the Senator, but by any citizen of the State who had anything to offer that would show corruption, fraud, or any violation of the laws referred to in the resolution. As I shall attempt to point out in a moment when I reach the charges which were preferred against Senator BILBO, it will become apparent that those charges did not involve the expenditure of money. The sole issue in the charges, as I conceive it, was whether or not Senator BILBO, by the use of force or in any other manner, intimidated the colored people of his State and thereby prevented them from registering or voting during the election of 1946. That was the sole issue which our committee had before it.

The authority to which I referred is contained in section 2 of the resolution, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized to act upon its own motion and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made to the committee, under oath, by any person, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in such complaint are immaterial or untrue. All hearings before the committee, and before any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, shall be public, and all orders and decisions of the committee, and of any such subcommittee, shall be public.

The resolution contains other sections which are not pertinent at the moment. They refer to an appropriation to be made to carry on the work of the committee.

As I indicated a while ago, the sole purpose of this committee, created by the Senate, was to investigate the campaign of any Senator whose election was held last year; and, of course, the resolution affected the election of every Senator-elect who is ready to take the oath of office. I am glad to inform the Senate that there have been relatively few complaints, and I doubt if any more will be filed than have heretofore been filed.

Mr. President, a moment ago I referred to the charges which were preferred against Senator BILBO. I ask the close attention of Senators to the charges, so that they can determine for themselves that the charges do not involve any fraud or any act on the part of Senator BILBO with respect to any money spent by him or, as I interpret it, any activity on his part during this campaign.

What is the origin of these charges and this long petition, which occupies a little more than five pages of closely printed matter? Was the petition drawn by citizens of Mississippi who felt themselves injured? No. It was drawn by and under the auspices of the Civil Rights Congress, of New York. The Civil Rights Congress has expressed itself in no uncertain terms as desirous of forming a committee within its ranks to throw BILBO out of the Senate. I charge that the Civil Rights Congress is loaded with termites—men and women who are boring from within, and who are now attacking the citadel of our democracy. This petition was composed and entirely written, I charge, by the Civil Rights Congress; and the citizens of Mississippi had no more to do with it than had my distinguished colleague. The record shows that it was fostered by a branch of the NAACP and some kind of a league headed by T. B. Wilson; but when the committee itself called upon the citizens of Mississippi who had signed that petition, there was not one who knew of his own knowledge any of the facts stated in it.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is familiar with the pleading of southern attorneys in Louisiana and in Mississippi. This petition was evidently drawn up by some attorneys-at-law. By reason of its redundancy and repetition, its lavish use of synonyms, is there any question at all that the pleading was not drawn up by any lawyer from Mississippi or Louisiana, without going any further?

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no doubt about it. The record itself shows the fact.

Mr. OVERTON. But one does not need to go beyond the petition itself?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is true.

Mr. OVERTON. I never in my life saw such a profligate use of synonyms. It would be useless to read them; Senators can do that for themselves.

Mr. ELLENDER. The petition was drawn by an attorney representing the Civil Rights Congress. I cannot recall his name at this time. He was present at the hearings, and, just before the hearings were had, he left the State of Mississippi. I was informed that he got hold of a number of witnesses and had them appear before our committee. I say to the Senate that every witness submitted by him or by anyone else was heard, and every opportunity was given to every Senator on the committee to ask questions.

I have been a Member of the Senate for 10 years. I have served on many committees and subcommittees, and never have I been a member of a committee in which there has been such a fine attendance. Every member of the committee was present every day we sat, except that for a short period one member was absent. There were seldom less than four out of the five members present. Every Senator was given ample opportunity to ask questions to his heart's content, and after the committee concluded, we turned the questioning over to our attorneys, and they interrogated the witnesses with the utmost latitude.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ELLENDER. Just a moment. Thereafter, by consent, we permitted Senator BILBO to ask as many questions as he desired. The attorney for Senator BILBO prepared written questions, and those questions were propounded by me, and every opportunity was given the witnesses to answer them.

Mr. OVERTON. Has the Senator ever known a case involving an election where the contestee did not have the right to examine witnesses either in person or through his counsel?

Mr. ELLENDER. I never have. To be frank about it, our committee discussed that matter, and we concluded that the best policy to pursue was to give the right to Senator BILBO to ask questions through the chairman. If we had not done that, we could have refused the same opportunity to the proponents of the petition. They had two or three attorneys there. We felt that that was the best way to handle the matter.

I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator. I wish to ask the Senator if he was referring to organizations in New York which became involved in the Bilbo matter. The Senator has doubtless read in the press that some charges had been made with respect to the election to the House of Representatives of a member of the American Labor Party, in the State of New York. It was charged that a Republican who was interested in the congressional election had been murdered because of his activities on election day. It was called murder in New York. It would be lynching if it had happened in Louisiana.

It was charged that there had been numerous violations of the law with respect to contributions to the campaign made by the individual involved.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle, in the recent senatorial and congressional campaigns, endeavored to frighten the electors of the country with the idea that the radicals or the extreme left wing element wanted to take over the Government of the United States; that there was infiltration by the Communists into positions of power, and that only the election of a Republican Congress would save the country.

Whatever may be the merits or demerits of Senator BILBO, I think everyone will agree that his name is certainly anathema No. 1 to all the Communists in the United States; and yet in this drive to oust radicalism and to preserve the country against communism, we find the No. 1 anathema of the Communists the subject of a violent controversy in the Senate, while, so far as I am advised, a representative of the Communist Party in the House of Representatives, where the Republicans also control, was not even asked to stand aside when he presented himself to take the oath of office.

I ask the Senator if he does not think there is such a thing as infiltration by left-wingers and that they have a way of transposing themselves very easily from one side of the aisle to the other.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not wish to criticize the action of my good friends at the other end of the Capitol. Of course, that is their business, and I am not at all familiar with the Marcantonio case, which I suppose is what the Senator refers to. I do not follow the newspaper reports, but it may be that a great deal of the talk which the newspaper articles generated was somewhat exaggerated. I do not know, but I believe that Mr. MARCANTONIO should certainly have been sworn in by the House of Representatives; and if any charges have been made or are to be made against him, I certainly believe he should have his day in court. I wish to take off my hat right now to the Members of the House of Representatives, for notwithstanding all of the grave charges which have been made against Mr. MARCANTONIO, the House of Representatives has permitted him, as I understand, to take his seat in the House. I do not know what will happen to him. If the charges warrant ouster, I know that the Members of the House of Representatives will do their duty.

Mr. MAYBANK rose.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator from Louisiana whether he issued subpenaes for all persons who were suggested as being witnesses against Mr. BILBO, regardless of whether they were recommended by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People or regardless of whoever may have recommended them.

Mr. ELLENDER. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who was present, that full opportunity was given to every witness who desired to be heard. For the first day we tried to get the witnesses to come voluntarily. Many came. Some refused to come, because they desired to be subpenaed. As soon as we found that out, we held a conference, at which we decided that if we were to get the witnesses who knew something about the matter or who could help in the case, we should subpena them. Thereupon, we gave instructions to our attorney to draw up the proper subpenaes; and I, as chairman of the committee, signed the subpenaes and had them served throughout the State of Mississippi.

Let me say a word in further answer to the question asked by the distinguished Senator. He will recall that every day when we recessed or adjourned from the morning until the afternoon or from the afternoon until the next morning, the chairman of the committee rose and asked whether there were present any other witnesses who desired to be heard. I wish to say also that for at least 2 weeks, or, in fact, from the time when we determined the date and hour at which we were to hold hearings in the State of Mississippi, I instructed our counsel, who went to Mississippi and publicized the fact, to invite every man, woman, and child in Mississippi who knew anything about these charges to come forward and testify. We even went so far as to say to them that if they came before us, we would protect them.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is it not a fact that on all occasions the courthouse was rather overcrowded; and is it not also a fact, as the Senator from Louisiana has stated, that when he called for the witnesses to come forward, many, both colored and white, came forward?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct. We elicited from them every bit of evidence which they had to offer, and we gave to all witnesses very ample opportunity to give to the committee whatever they knew about the case.

Mr. MAYBANK. In addition to that, is it not true that some of the witnesses who were subpenaed were delayed because of the distance they had to travel, and in their cases the committee postponed the time for their appearance, in order to suit their convenience?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. President, I do not think it really is necessary for us to say anything further on that subject, because I am confident that my two distinguished colleagues on the other side of the aisle, who served with distinction on that committee, know that we made every effort to hear all the evidence in substantiation of the charges.

As I have said, the charges are long and somewhat complicated. I believe that many good lawyers probably could have drafted them in about two paragraphs. However, the persons who drafted the charges wished to be certain to have them cover everything. In other words, I cannot help but feel that they themselves thought they had a rather bad case, and it was their desire to cover every possible point.

I wish to say to the Senate that our committee diligently investigated this matter. Today we have before the Senate our report, and I propose to read it after a while.

Mr. President, what is this petition? As I have said, it was drafted, not by a citizen of Mississippi but by an organization which I again charge to have within itself a lot of termites who are boring from within. Today that organization is composed of people who, as I have said heretofore, have belonged to various groups throughout the United States. How they are able to induce fine citizens of New York, fine citizens of Pennsylvania, and fine citizens of other States of the Union to put up money to help them out is simply beyond my comprehension. Some of these days they will wake up and will find out, and I hope that happens before it is too late.

Mr. President, just listen to this petition. I hope all Members of the Senate listen to it:

To the honorable Senate of the United States of America:

(Attention Committee on Privileges and Elections, Committee on Campaign Expenditures.)

The undersigned hereby petition for the redress of the following grievances and respectfully show and allege—

Mr. President, I repeat that I hope all Senators will follow the reading of this petition. The Members of the Senate will notice that there is not a word in it about unlawful expenditures or anything of the kind. As I interpret the petition, it is based solely on the charge of intimidation, and so forth, of the Negro citizens in Mississippi.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Louisiana does not mean to imply by that statement, does he, that his committee would not have jurisdiction to go into any matter outside of campaign expenditures? His committee did have jurisdiction to go into other things, in addition to actual campaign expenditures, did it not?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as I explained a moment ago, our powers were very broad. But our powers had to be confined to the election which was held in 1946.

I stated a while ago that the $25,000 contribution charge which the Senator's committee investigated was submitted to us, we submitted it to our attorneys, and we were told by our attorneys that our committee had no jurisdiction of that because it referred to an election which took place in 1942, and had absolutely nothing to do with the election of Senator BILBO in July 1946.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. For a question. Does the Senator desire to ask a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; on that very issue. I have a copy of a letter dated October 8, 1946, in which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, sent to Senator James M. Mead a copy of the charges, which letter was mailed to him by former Representative Ross Collins. The Senator from Rhode Island sent a copy also to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] on October 8.

If the Senator will yield long enough I should like to put into the RECORD a copy of the letter received from the Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and also state that the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program referred certain letters to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which I am a member. Being a member of both committees, I happen to have personal knowledge of these facts, and, as I understand, those matters were referred to the special committee of which the able Senator from Louisiana was the chairman.

Mr. ELLENDER. I so indicated a moment ago. I stated that we had considered the matter, and at the time some of us felt that we might have to investigate, but before proceeding we decided to have our committee counsel pass judgment on the question, as we did as to every other charge made, and our committee counsel advised us that since the charge referred to expenditures or matters which related to another election, or which related to 1942, and had no connection with the 1946 election, under the resolution giving us the power to investigate we could not go into the matter.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think that does explain the matter. As I have tried to demonstrate, these two committees worked together in such a way as would not conflict with the jurisdiction of each other. But the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program certainly had jurisdiction, and when it is stated on the floor of the Senate that we are interlopers, I think that is absurd. We were working under jurisdiction properly provided; we had had this matter referred to us by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and we took jurisdiction after we heard from them. For that reason I should like to offer these matters for the RECORD at this point.

While I am on the floor, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not wish to lose the floor, and I yield with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yesterday I asked permission to put into the official RECORD of the Senate the report of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, and through some mistake of some kind, either in what I had said or in the understanding of what I had said, it was not included in the official RECORD. I now ask that the report by printed in the RECORD, together with the correspondence to which I have heretofore referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks that certain papers be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report and correspondence were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INVESTIGATION OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. KILGORE, from the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, submitted the following additional report:

TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN SENATOR THEODORE G. BILBO AND VARIOUS WAR CONTRACTORS

Introduction

Allegations were made to the committee that Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, of Mississippi, had received certain sums of money and had accepted personal property and improvements to real estate owned by him from a number of contractors performing construction work for the United States Government in connection with the national defense program.

Upon instructions from the committee, a preliminary investigation was conducted as to these allegations. After presentation of the results of this preliminary investigation to the committee, on November 18, 1946, the committee decided to proceed with a full investigation. The chairman appointed a subcommittee consisting of Senator James M. Mead (Democrat, New York) as chairman and Senator James M. Tunnell (Democrat, Delaware), and Senator Homer Ferguson (Republican, Michigan), to conduct the inquiry. This subcommittee held executive hearings, and on November 23, 1946, announced that it would commence public hearings on Thursday, December 12, 1946.

At Senator BILBO's request, the committee notified him of the nature of the allegations as then known to the committee and advised that it would be willing to subpena, at committee expense, any witnesses suggested by him after the committee had satisfied itself that such witnesses would be able to present first-hand information as to the matters before the committee. Prior to the hearing, no request was made by Senator BILBO that the committee produce any witnesses other than those subpenaed on the committee's own motion, which were stated by Senator BILBO's attorney, Mr. Forrest Jackson, to be all of the witnesses known to Senator BILBO or Mr. Jackson having knowledge of the matters under investigation.

The subcommittee convened on December 12, 1946, and remained in continuous session until December 19, 1946, hearing 44 witnesses and taking 564 pages of testimony and receiving 126 documentary exhibits. These exhibits, as well as the testimony which has been transcribed, are available for examination.

Senator BILBO was at all times present during the conduct of these proceedings, together with his counsel, Mr. Forrest Jackson, and he testified under oath.

The committee made plain that its investigation was confined to the examination of Senator BILBO's relations with war contractors. The committee did not concern itself with his controversies with any racial or religious minority groups, nor was it concerned with the propriety of the conduct of his recent election campaign, which has been the subject of an investigation by the Special Committee To Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946. The committee, of course, took notice that Senator BILBO's alleged conduct in connection with war contractors might have a bearing upon his fitness to serve as a Senator, but sought to confine itself, to the extent that it was possible, to the examination of his relation to national defense contracts.

During the course of the proceedings certain matters developed in the testimony not directly related to war contracts, but which had a bearing upon the credibility and interest of witnesses, including Senator BILBO himself. The committee explored these matters to the extent it considered appropriate, and in some cases did so at the request of Senator BILBO.

Summary of findings

The evidence before the committee is clear and undisputed that Senator BILBO assisted certain contractors in obtaining contracts for the construction of national defense installations in the State of Mississippi. Among these contracts were the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts for the construction of the Camp Jackson Army Air Base, Jackson, Miss., by the M. T. Reed Construction Co., at a cost of $2,639,983.84; the construction of the cantonment at Key Field, Meridian, Miss., by a joint venture consisting of A. B. Friend, Volz Construction Co., Rock City Construction Co., and Flint-Jordan Construction Co., at a cost of $1,731,129.75; and the construction of the aviation mechanics training school, known as Keesler Field, Biloxi, Miss., by a joint venture consisting of the J. A. Jones Construction Co., B. L. Knost, and a copartnership of Newton & Glenn, at a cost of $13,967,005.15. A list of the War Department contracts involved in this case is set forth as appendix I.

The committee finds no impropriety in Senator BILBO's assisting his constituents in obtaining and performing war contracts. The impropriety of Senator BILBO's actions consists in the acceptance of gifts, services, and political contributions from these same contractors whom he had aided. The committee is unable to accept the theory that Senator BILBO's aid to those dealing in Government contracts and the benefits he received were unrelated.

Testimony and documentary evidence before the committee indicates that during the war period Senator BILBO received substantial benefits from war contractors. He accepted as gifts a Cadillac sedan, valued at $1,906.67, and house furnishings valued at $500 or more. He also allowed war contractors to improve his estate at Poplarville, Miss., by constructing an artificial lake and island, a swimming pool, and by painting his home. The total cost of the foregoing improvements was at least $6,658.40. The contractors billed Senator BILBO for these services. However, Senator BILBO has not made any payments for these improvements, other than an alleged $200 on the painting bill, since the services were rendered in 1941 and 1942, nor have the contractors made any efforts to collect. The committee is convinced from the testimony and the circumstances that the benefits conferred on Senator BILBO as improvements to his real estate, which Senator BILBO and these war contractors now seek to treat as an indebtedness now payable by Senator BILBO, were not bona fide transactions in the ordinary course of business, but, on the other hand, were an attempted subterfuge to conceal the donation of funds in payment for services rendered to them by Senator BILBO. Also during the war period, Senator BILBO allowed Michael T. Morrissey, a war contractor, to incur a loss of $48,043.28 in the operation of Senator BILBO's Mississippi farm lands.

In the summer and fall of 1942, Senator BILBO received the sum of $30,000 from three war contractors. These funds were said to have been used by an "informal" committee, of which Senator BILBO was a member, in the 1942 political compaign of Wall Doxey, for the United States Senate in the Mississippi Democratic primary. The donation and solicitation of political contributions from Government contractors while they are negotiating or performing such contracts is prohibited by a Federal criminal statute (title 18, sec. 61–m–1, U. S. C.).

In some instances, the war contractors in making political contributions and in making improvements on Senator BILBO's estate, sought to charge the cost of such contributions and services as an expense on their books. Twenty thousand dollars of the F. T. Newton political contribution of $25,000 was originally charged directly to war contracts on the books of Newton & Glenn. These entries were changed on their books only after disallowance either by their own auditors or by Government agents. Five thousand dollars of this $25,000 was never located on the contractors' books.

Between February 24, 1943, and August 27, 1945, Senator BILBO also collected from many persons, including war contractors, contributions amounting to at least $27,501.51 for the building of a church parsonage on land owned by Senator BILBO. At least $7,300 of the foregoing total was collected from war contractors who had been aided by Senator BILBO. The title to this parsonage still remains in Senator BILBO, although the parsonage was substantially completed over 2 years ago. None of the war contractors contributing to the above-stated total of $7,300 were residents of Poplarville, Miss., near which the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage are located; nor were they members of that church. The construction of this parsonage was a personal philanthropic enterprise of Senator BILBO's. It was improper for him to utilize the aid he had given these war contractors as a means of inducing them to contribute substantial amounts to his personal charities, administered solely by him.

The evidence presented to this committee clearly indicates that Senator BILBO improperly used his high office as United States Senator for his personal gain in his dealings with war contractors.

Detailed discussion of facts

In discussing the evidence produced in the committee's public hearings, it is helpful to consider the various transactions involved in this investigation in four separate categories, as follows:

1. Sums of money received by Senator BILBO from war contractors, stated to have been used in the 1942 Mississippi senatorial campaign.

2. Gratuities or benefits received by Senator BILBO from war contractors.

3. Funds paid by war contractors to Senator BILBO for the construction of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage.

4. Other matters not directly related to war contracts.

1. Sums of Money Received by Senator BILBO From War Contractors, Stated To Have Been Used in the 1942 Mississippi Senatorial Campaign

Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, died on June 22, 1941. His term of office expired in January 1943. For the unexpired portion of his term, Wall Doxey, present Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, was among the candidates. Senator BILBO and some of his friends, including Forrest Jackson, Robert Gandy, and A. B. Friend, aided Wall Doxey in this campaign and collected funds for campaign expenses. Wall Doxey was elected in the 1941 Democratic primary to the Senate to serve for the unexpired term of Senator Harrison.

In Mississippi, there were two Democratic primary elections in 1942. The first of these was held on August 25. The two candidates receiving the highest votes in this first primary then became the candidates in the second or run-off Democratic primary, which in 1942 was held on September 15. In the first Democratic primary in 1942, there were five candidates: Senator James O. Eastland, Wall Doxey, Ross A. Collins, Roland Wall, and Douglas Smith. Senator Doxey and Senator Eastland, being the two highest candidates in the first primary, became the candidates in the second, or run-off primary.

On June 12, 1942, B. L. Knost, a member of the joint venture of Newton & Glenn, a partnership, B. L. Knost, and the J. A. Jones Construction Co. on the $13,000,000 contract for the construction of Keesler Field at Biloxi, Miss., gave Senator BILBO $5,000. This $5,000 was stated, both by Senator BILBO and by B. L. Knost, to be a contribution to the campaign of Wall Doxey, then a candidate for election to the United States Senate in the first Democratic primary. The discussion preceding the delivery of this $5,000 occurred at a dinner at the home of B. L. Knost, at which Senator BILBO and Michael Morrissey, a subcontractor on the above-mentioned contract, were present. Senator BILBO testified that he told Mr. Knost at this dinner meeting that they needed money for Wall Doxey's campaign, and, as a result, Mr. Knost gave him the check for $5,000, one-half of which he was to pay from his funds and one-half of which he was to pay from Michael Morrissey's funds, both Morrissey and Knost being engaged in a joint venture on work for the Government. The testimony is clear that this money was solicited by Senator BILBO within the meaning of section 61–m–1 of title 18, United States Code.

In a letter dated September 3, 1942, A. B. Friend advised Mr. F. T. Newton, who was then at Greenville, Miss., that Senator BILBO wanted Newton to meet him at the Royal Hotel, Jackson, Miss., on September 7. A copy of this letter is set forth as appendix II. On September 7, 1942, Newton attended a political rally at Jackson, Miss. This rally was said to be held for the purpose of stimulating interest in and collecting funds for Wall Doxey's campaign. Senator BILBO was one of the speakers at the meeting.

After the meeting, on September 7, 1942, F. T. Newton of the firm of Newton & Glenn, one of the members of the coventure mentioned above, delivered to Senator BILBO four checks drawn by Newton, and made payable to Senator BILBO on four different banks, totaling $25,000. This money was a contribution to the second Mississippi Democratic primary campaign for the election of Wall Doxey to the United States Senate.

The Newton and Knost donations were contributed to the "informal" committee for the election of Wall Doxey in the 1942 United States senatorial campaign, which committee consisted of Senator Theodore G. Bilbo, Forrest Jackson, Robert Gandy, and A. B. Friend. The testimony discloses that no account of receipts and expenditures of this informal committee were ever filed with the State of Mississippi. It was contended by Forrest Jackson, attorney for Senator BILBO, that the law did not require the so-called informal committee to make a report of receipts and expenditures in the campaign.

No complete accounting of the receipts and expenditures was maintained. Robert Gandy, however, one of the members of the committee, maintained a book of accounts of moneys received by him personally and his expenditure of those funds. Mr. Gandy's account book was received in evidence. This account book included funds received and disbursements made in both the 1941 and 1942 campaigns. This book did not disclose the receipt of the $25,000 from F. T. Newton. This account book does show the receipt of $5,000 from B. L. Knost in June 1942 but indicates that this $5,000 check payable to Senator BILBO was merely a loan to the campaign fund. Mr. Gandy could not recall why he made the notation in his account book to the effect that this $5,000 check was a loan. Both Senator BILBO and Mr. Knost testified that they considered this $5,000 check to be an outright contribution to Wall Doxey's campaign.

The testimony of the other members of the committee, as well as Mr. Gandy, discloses that funds in addition to those contained in Mr. Gandy's account were received and disbursed by the other members of the committee, but none of them was able to state at the hearing any amount received by him individually, aside from Mr. Gandy, nor the total amount received and disbursed by the entire group.

Wall Doxey had a campaign committee under the direction of his campaign manager, Mr. Lee D. Hall. This committee filed an accounting of its receipts and expenditures and presented a detailed statement of receipts and disbursements in our public hearings.

The record clearly shows that Wall Doxey had no knowledge of the collection of $25,000 from F. T. Newton for his 1942 campaign. He first learned of this contribution in October 1942, after the campaign was over.

Under these circumstances, it is impossible for the committee to ascertain whether or not all of the funds collected for the Doxey campaign were expended for this purpose. It was testified by some of the witnesses that a part of the funds were used to enlist the support of two of the defeated candidates in the first primary; namely, Roland Wall and Ross A. Collins. It was explained that it was a custom in Mississippi politics to pay the operating deficits of defeated candidates in the first primary to enlist the support of the defeated candidate and his organization in behalf of a particular candidate in the second or run-off primary. As previously stated, this 1942 run-off was a contest between Senator EASTLAND and Wall Doxey.

Mr. Roland Wall testified that he entered into an agreement with the informal committee to support Doxey in the second primary in consideration of the payment to him of $8,000, the amount of his operating deficit. He also testified that he received out of this amount approximately $6,000 and that he considered the balance of $2,000 still owing to him.

With respect to Ross Collins, it was stated by Senator Bilbo, Forrest Jackson, and Robert Gandy that at a meeting with Ross Collins after his defeat in the first primary at Collins' suite in the Robert E. Lee Hotel in Jackson, Miss., Collins designated Cecil Travis to arrange for the payment of funds for the support of Wall Doxey by the Collins organization, and that subsequently arrangements were made with Travis to enlist the aid of the Collins organization for the sum of $11,000, which was paid to Travis.

Collins, supported by his secretary, Lura Harrison, denied that any such agreement was made and denied that any deficit existed. Collins denied that Travis had been authorized by him to enter into any such arrangement for the support of Wall Doxey by the Collins forces, and, on the contrary, he, Collins, had stated publicly, as well as individually, to his supporters that they were at liberty to support whatever candidate they pleased in the second primary. Collins' position on this subject is supported by Travis, as well as by two other witnesses to the conference, Charles Snow and George Butler.

Cecil Travis admitted receiving $11,000, but stated that it was not for the payment of the Collins' operating deficit, but for expenditures in Wall Doxey's campaign in the second primary, computed on the basis of $100 each for the organizations in the 82 counties of Mississippi, plus $3,000 for the operation of State headquarters. Travis states that he delivered the $11,000 to Phil Kimball, who Travis stated delivered it to the various county organizations. Kimball is dead.

Aside from the book of accounts kept by Robert Gandy and the records of the checks which were paid, very little documentary evidence exists from which it can be ascertained precisely who were the contributors or what amounts were received in contributions by the so-called informal committee. Likewise, it is not possible to determine the amounts expended, and to whom these funds were paid, and for what purpose. For the most part, the funds were handled in cash without a record being made.

The committee is, therefore, unable to find with certainty whether or not the funds received from war contractors and others were, in fact, completely expended for the Wall Doxey campaign.

It is, however, clear that at least $30,000 of the funds received by Senator BILBO for the informal committee were paid by war contractors. This fact makes pertinent a Federal statute passed July 19, 1940, designed to prohibit Government contractors from contributing to political campaigns. Senator BILBO, although only a member of a four-man committee, in his own words was a good "collector" of campaign funds, and on his own admissions and testimony the committee concludes that he solicited the $5,000 from B. L. Knost and the $25,000 from F. T. Newton.

Title 18, section 61–m–1, of the United States Code, provides as follows:

"61–m–1. Contracts with United States; contributions by contractors prohibited: (a) No person or firm entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof, either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, shall, during the period of negotiation for, or performance under such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly, or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; nor shall any person knowingly solicit any such contribution from any such person or firm, for any such purpose during any such period. Any person who violates the provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years.

"(b) Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit any action which is prohibited by any provision of law in force on the date this section takes effect (July 19, 1940, ch. 640, sec. 5, 54 Stat. 772)."

The purpose of this statute was to remove, or at least minimize, one source of corruption in politics. It was precisely this sort of activity in connection with the national defense program that the Senate created this committee to investigate and expose.

The committee has had occasion to consider this statute previously. It has been impressed upon the committee that the statute is limited in its application to those who contribute funds and those who knowingly solicit funds, but is silent as to those who knowingly accept or receive such illegal contributions. The committee considers this an important loophole in the law and calls the existence of this defect to the attention of the Senate.

2. Gratuities or Benefits Received by Senator Bilbo From War Contractors

The evidence establishes that Senator BILBO has received from war contractors benefits of value which are set forth as follows:

Date	Name of war contractors	Nature of benefit	Minimum value	Maximum value
1941	M. T. Reed	Painting Dream House No. 1	$1,790.79	$1,790.79
Do	M. T. Morrissey	Artificial lake and island	3,672.91	34,500.00
Dec. 24, 1941	do	Cadillac sedan	1,906.67	1,906.67
Dec. 25, 1941	Several contractors and others	Furnishings for Dream House No. 2	500.00	1,000.00
April 1942	John R. Junkin	Swimming pool	1,194.70	1,500.00
1942–45	M. T. Morrissey	Operation of Bilbo's farm property	48,023.98	48,023.98
Total			57,089.05	88,721.44

Senator BILBO has admitted the receipt of a Cadillac car and furniture for Dream House No. 2 as Christmas gifts. The remainder of the foregoing benefits, with the exception of the operating loss of approximately $48,000 expended by Michael T. Morrissey in his operation of Senator BILBO's farm for 4 years, were all stated by Senator BILBO to be items which he owes. All of the foregoing benefits were conferred prior to January 1943, at which time Senator BILBO filed with the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans a financial statement in connection with a rearrangement of his loan with that bank, in which he failed to mention any of the foregoing items as debts owed by him.

For the excavation of the 15-acre lake surrounding the island on which Dream House No. 2 is built, Contractor Michael T. Morrissey submitted a bill for $3,672.91. Morrissey testified that this did not include any charge for the use of his construction equipment; that if he had charged Senator BILBO at the same rate he charged the Government, there would have been an additional charge of $5,500, or a total of approximately $9,000 for this work.

Col. John L. Person, of the Corps of United States Army Engineers, testified that the fair cost, without a profit, for excavating work of the character done by Morrissey would be 20 cents per cubic yard, and, with a profit included, 22 to 23 cents per cubic yard. Morrissey testified that in creating the 15-acre lake he moved from 150,000 to 165,000 cubic yards of earth. Computed on the basis of the figures given by the Corps of Engineers and Morrissey's testimony, the value of the excavation work to create the lake would have run from $34,500 to $37,950.

For pouring the concrete for the swimming pool on Senator BILBO's estate in April 1942, the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., sent a bill to Senator BILBO for $1,194.70. This bill was marked "Paid in full—St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc.," when it was mailed to Senator

BILBO. Mr. John R. Junkin, president of the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., testified that if a profit on this work were included in the bill it would have run about $1,500. Mr. Junkin testified that regardless of the fact that the bill was marked "Paid in full," he did not consider the bill paid, but merely that it had been transferred from the account of the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., a corporation, to the personal account of himself and his brother, sole owners of the corporation. Senator BILBO has paid nothing on this bill, nor has the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., nor Mr. Junkin, made any effort to collect it.

Although the books of the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., reflect that this pool was paid for in cash by Senator BILBO on May 28, 1942, the corporation listed the cost of this pool as a gift in its 1942 Federal income-tax return. This deduction was subsequently disallowed by income-tax agents in 1946. Mr. Junkin testified that the swimming pool was listed as a gift on his corporate tax return as the result of a bookkeeper's error. At the time Mr. Junkin worked on the swimming pool for Senator BILBO, his corporation was working on a half-million-dollar Government contract at Keesler Field.

In the spring of 1941 Mr. M. T. Reed, a war contractor, painted Senator BILBO's Dream House No. 1 and sent him a bill for $1,790.79. Both Mr. Reed and Senator BILBO claim that this is a debt which Senator BILBO owes, and Reed testified that he has made no effort to collect it. However, Senator BILBO testified that this year he sent Mr. Reed 400 pounds of pecans from his farm for which he credited $200 against the painting bill.

Mr. Reed testified that he wrote off this account as a bad debt in 1941 and sought to take advantage of it in connection with his Federal income-tax return. However, this deduction was subsequently disallowed by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Senator BILBO testified that the statute of limitations in Mississippi outlawed debts on open accounts, such as those for the lake, swimming pool, and paint job after 3 years. Three years has run since all of the foregoing items were furnished and the debts are therefore uncollectible by law. Senator BILBO testified that notwithstanding this perfect legal defense to any action brought by these war contractors to collect the alleged indebtedness, it was not his practice to take advantage of that defense, and that he would pay these debts some time when he was able.

In addition to the foregoing improvements on Senator BILBO's estate, he also, at Christmas time in 1941, received a new Cadillac sedan as a Christmas present from Michael T. Morrissey. This automobile was purchased by Morrissey at a cost of $1,906.67 and is said by Morrissey, and admitted by Senator BILBO, to be an outright gift.

Also at Christmas in 1941, certain household furnishings for use in Dream House No. 2 were presented to Senator BILBO by several friends, including B. L. Knost, F. T. Newton, and John R. Junkin, who were war contractors. Edward P. Terry, who purchased these furnishings, estimated their value at approximately $1,000. He testified that the contributions he collected were insufficient to pay the cost of the furniture and that he, together with Robert Gandy, borrowed $500 from the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., of Jackson, Miss., on December 23, 1941, for the purpose of defraying the balance of the cost of the furniture. On July 29, 1942, this $500 note was paid by M. T. Reed, a war contractor, who was advised that the money was originally borrowed by Terry and Gandy for the benefit of Senator BILBO. Reed has never sought to recover this $500, nor has Senator BILBO acknowledged it as a debt.

From 1942 through 1945, Michael T. Morrissey, under an agreement with Senator BILBO, operated Senator BILBO's farm properties under an oral agreement whereby Morrissey was to pay all operating expenses and in the event the farm operation showed a profit he was to split this profit 50–50 with Senator BILBO and in case the operation showed a loss, Morrissey was to absorb all losses. Morrissey's records reflect that during this 4-year period, he lost a total of $48,023.48 in this operation.

This farm arrangement seems to be extremely unusual. The farm accounts show the expenditures to be extremely high in view of the amount of income received. Morrissey testified that he took advantage of these losses in his income-tax returns with the effect that approximately 80 percent of the losses were, in effect, paid by the Government, since he was in the 80-percent income-tax bracket.

The committee has been unable to ascertain the exact extent of the benefit to Senator BILBO arising from this farm operation. Taxes approximating $1,000 a year were paid by Morrissey for 3 years and were included in his operating losses. Substantial amounts were expended on fertilizer. Pay rolls appear to be excessive in view of the income from sales. For example, in the year 1943 the total income from the sale of produce was $7,267.83, together with $3,351.08 received as AAA conservation benefits paid by the Federal Government. The total gross income for 1943 was $10,627.91. In this same year, the pay roll was $10,777, exceeding the total gross income by over $100. A much more detailed examination of the farm books and records, as well as witnesses, would be required to ascertain accurately the benefit received by Senator BILBO from these extensive losses by Michael T. Morrissey under an oral agreement which, in itself, does not savor of the usual business transaction.

Under the circumstances, the committee is not convinced by the explanation that the foregoing benefits received by Senator BILBO from various war contractors were either pure Christmas gifts or ordinary business transactions, as Senator BILBO now claims. The explanations now offered, in the judgment of the committee, do not ring true, in the light of the conduct of the parties in the years intervening between the receipt of the benefits and the time of the committee's hearing. The committee considers the claims now made as a mere subterfuge manufactured for the occasion of this committee's hearing.

The committee considers Senator BILBO's acceptance of expensive gifts and donations of personal property and the acceptance of improvements to real estate, provided by contractors who have profited out of their work for the Government in the war effort, to be an illegal practice in violation of existing Federal statutes.

3. Funds Paid to Senator BILBO for the Construction of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and Parsonage

Senator BILBO lives near Poplarville, Miss., where he owns a large tract of land. He is a member of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church, the church property adjoining his property. Since 1942 Senator BILBO has solicited funds which he stated were for the construction of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage. These solicitations were made both orally and in letters. Included among the persons solicited were a number of war contractors.

On February 24, 1943, Senator BILBO opened a special bank account at the Bank of Commerce, Poplarville, Miss., in which he deposited donations received for this parsonage. He had sole authority to draw on this church fund and was the only person who drew on this account. The evidence indicates that he refused to allow church officials to have access to the fund or information concerning it. From February 24, 1943, to August 27, 1945, Senator BILBO deposited $27,501.51 in this account. As of August 15, 1946, he had withdrawn all but $1,285.38. There is no evidence that he used this fund for anything other than the construction of the parsonage and minor repairs to the church; however, from available books and records it is not possible to determine what disposition was made of all of these funds. Construction of the parsonage was begun in 1943 and was substantially completed 2 years ago. This parsonage is built on property owned by Senator BILBO which is adjacent to the church property. It is a brick veneer structure with eight bedrooms and five baths.

The property upon which the parsonage is located is part of a tract of land which Senator BILBO had previously mortgaged to the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans and the Bank of Commerce, Poplarville, Miss. On December 11, 1946, the Federal land bank released the parsonage property consisting of about 4 acres from its first mortgage securing Senator BILBO's indebtedness and on November 19, 1946, the Bank of Commerce released the parsonage property which had been part of the security for Senator BILBO's loan from that bank.

The bank records reflect that at least $7,300 of the parsonage fund collected by Senator BILBO was obtained from war contractors whom he had assisted. It is not possible from available records to determine whether an additional part of the contributions to this fund were also made by war contractors. However, none of the war contractors who are known to have contributed the $7,300 to the parsonage fund are residents of Poplarville, Miss., or members of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church.

Rev. D. Wade Smith became pastor of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church on October 22, 1944. He testified before the committee that the parsonage at that time was practically completed, but that he did not move into it. In fact, the parsonage has never been occupied. Reverend Smith and some of the church members sought to have the parsonage completed, since there was relatively little work to be done, but were unsuccessful. In the fall of 1945 Reverend Smith built his own house some 2 miles from the church and, according to his testimony, it has been only in the last 6 weeks that any substantial amount of work has been done on the parsonage during the entire period that he has been the pastor of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church.

During the period of the committee's investigation certain steps have been taken by Senator BILBO, such as the afore-mentioned release of the mortgages on the parsonage property and the preparation of a deed, and Reverend Smith testified that he now expects to move into the parsonage on January 1, 1947, and that formal dedication of the parsonage and the church is being planned for April 27, 1947.

The committee has no evidence that the funds collected for this parsonage by Senator BILBO have been used for any other purpose.

Although Senator BILBO was a member of the finance committee and the building committee of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church, he had sole control of the funds which he collected for the parsonage and exclusive title to the property on which it was built. The construction of this parsonage was a personal, philanthropic enterprise of Senator BILBO. It was improper for him to utilize the aid he had given these war contractors as a means of inducing them to contribute substantial amounts to his personal charities, administered solely by him.

4. Other Matters Not Directly Related to War Contracts

(a) The Shushan note: Preliminary information received by the committee indicated that a $3,000 note owed by Senator BILBO to Abraham L. Shushan, of New Orleans, La., was expected to be paid off by war contractors. This information was received from Edward P. Terry, former secretary to Senator BILBO.

On July 21, 1938, Abraham L. Shushan, of New Orleans, La., lent Senator BILBO $3,000 for which he took a note signed by Senator BILBO and endorsed by Grant Stewart, of New Hebron, Miss. This loan to Senator BILBO was for the purpose of helping to settle his financial obligations to his recently divorced wife. Subsequently in January 1939 Senator BILBO contacted J. P. Wenchel, chief counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in an attempt to get the Government to accept an offer in compromise of $40,000 to settle an $80,000 tax liability of Shushan's. The Bureau refused to settle and eventually collected in full.

The testimony concerning Shushan's demands for repayment of this note is in conflict. Some of the witnesses testified that in 1940 Shushan, who was then under prison sentence in connection with a Federal mail fraud violation, or his representatives, had indicated that if the note was not promptly paid by Senator BILBO, it would be turned over to Hugh White, who was then a candidate against Senator BILBO in the senatorial race of 1940. Mr. Edward P. Terry testified that Senator BILBO told him that Shushan never intended to be paid back if BILBO was successful in assisting Shushan in his pending difficulties with the Federal Government. Shushan denied both of these statements.

This $3,000 note was paid on July 15, 1940. The funds for its payment were supplied as follows:

$750 from Forrest Jackson, attorney at law, Jackson, Miss.

$750 from Robert Newton, president, Bank of Commerce, Poplarville, Miss.

$750 from Grant Stewart, merchant, New Hebron, Miss.

$750 from Edward P. Terry.

Senator BILBO paid Grant Stewart the $750 which Stewart had advanced and Forrest Jackson paid Edward P. Terry the amount which Terry had advanced. Stewart is now dead.

Forrest Jackson, although not a war contractor, did participate in the premium for binder insurance on Keesler Field through his law firm, which received a total of approximately $900, which Jackson split 50–50 with his partner. Jackson's law firm also represented A. B. Friend, Volz Construction Co., Rock City Construction Co., and Flint-Jordan Construction Co. in connection with their contract for the construction of Key Field at Meridian, Miss.

Both Robert Newton and Jackson testified that they had made no effort to collect from Senator BILBO the money which they had paid on his note to A. L. Shushan, and Senator BILBO has paid them nothing on this account.

(b) The narcotics charge: Wholly aside from the matter of war contracts, a matter was injected into the proceedings by the witness, Edward P. Terry, which, out of justice to those involved in the charge, the committee was required to explore.

This charge, in substance, was that in the summer of 1945, Senator BILBO received from one John A. Carr, an aged drug addict of Natchez, Miss., through Dr. A. J. Podesta, of Vicksburg, Miss., the sum of $1,500, and that Senator BILBO interceded with Harry J. Anslinger, Commissioner of Narcotics, to obtain the consent of the Bureau of Narcotics to the sale of 2 grains of morphine daily to Mr. Carr by Dr. J. G. Logan, of Natchez, Miss.

Senator BILBO testified that at the request of Dr. Podesta, who was his close friend and personal physician, he presented the facts of this narcotic matter to Mr. Anslinger. However, Senator BILBO denied that he received any money either for himself or for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church from Dr. Podesta, or any other person in connection with this case.

Mr. Anslinger testified that he called at Senator BILBO's office on October 11, 1945, read a letter to Senator BILBO from Dr. Podesta and certificates by Dr. Podesta and Dr. Logan attached to the letter. On the basis of those documents Mr. Anslinger concluded that the request made of him was justified, and on that date wrote a letter to Dr. Logan stating that the Bureau of Narcotics had no objection to the sale of 2 grains of morphine daily to Mr. Carr.

From the testimony of Mr. Anslinger, it would appear that not only from his examination of the doctors' certificates which he read in Senator BILBO's office, but also from an independent investigation by an agent of the Bureau of Narcotics, the request of Mr. Carr was wholly justified and would have been granted without the intercession of Senator BILBO.

The testimony of disinterested witnesses who had interviewed Dr. Podesta, one an agent of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and one an investigator for this committee, corroborated the testimony given by Mr. Terry to the effect that Carr, through Dr. Podesta, had paid at least $1,000 to Senator BILBO.

Dr. Podesta told two special agents of the Internal Revenue Bureau who interviewed him jointly on April 30, 1946, and told an investigator of this committee on October 18, 1946, that in the summer of 1945 he had received from Mr. Carr the sum of $1,000, which he (Podesta) paid to Senator BILBO at the Walthall Hotel in Jackson, Miss. Dr. Podesta told these agents that in a conversation with Mr. Carr he (Podesta) had mentioned that Carr might pay the funds to Senator BILBO as a contribution to the Juniper Grove Baptist Church parsonage fund. The two internal revenue agents interviewed Mr. Carr on May 1, 1946. Carr stated to them that he did not consider the money paid to Senator BILBO as a contribution to the Juniper Grove Baptist Church parsonage fund, but as a payment to Senator BILBO for services rendered.

On December 20, 1946, Dr. Podesta was reinterviewed by an investigator of this committee and at that time he furnished a notarized statement to the investigator setting forth his recollection of the facts in this case. In his statement, which is set forth as appendix III, Dr. Podesta said that after the Bureau of Narcotics had granted permission to prescribe narcotics for Mr. Carr, Carr called upon Dr. Podesta and told him he wanted to do something for Senator BILBO. According to Dr. Podesta, he told Carr that Senator BILBO was endeavoring to complete the church and parsonage of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church. Mr. Carr then gave Dr. Podesta $1,000 to be given to Senator BILBO for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church fund. Dr. Podesta states that a day or two later he met Senator BILBO at the Royal Hotel in Jackson, Miss., and gave him the ten $100 bills which had been turned over to him by Mr. Carr. At that time Dr. Podesta told Senator BILBO that the $1,000 was for the church fund.

Mr. John A. Carr was also interviewed by a committee investigator at Natchez, Miss., on December 22, 1946, and executed a statement in his own handwriting concerning this matter. This statement is set forth as appendix IV. Mr. Carr in this statement says that 3 or 4 weeks after Dr. Logan had received permission from the Bureau of Narcotics to administer narcotics to him he, Carr, called upon Dr. Podesta to thank him for what he had done. At that time Mr. Carr said he gave Dr. Podesta ten $100 bills for Senator BILBO's church fund.

In a written statement dated December 22, 1946, Dr. J. G. Logan, of Natchez, advised the committee investigator that in August 1945 he gave Mr. Carr a statement as to his physical condition and need for a small amount of narcotics. Dr. Logan further stated that in October 1945 he received a letter from the Bureau of Narcotics granting him permission to prescribe morphine for Mr. Carr. Dr. Logan says he has no knowledge concerning any financial transactions in connection with this narcotics matter. A copy of Dr. Logan's statement is set forth as appendix V.

The bank statement for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church special fund by THEODORE G. BILBO discloses that the deposits for the year 1945, and up to August 22, 1946, were as follows:

Jan. 8, 1945	$50
May 10, 1945	200
Aug. 27, 1945	2,000
Do	100

The committee possesses a photostatic copy of a deposit slip evidencing the $2,000 deposit on August 27, 1945, showing that it is composed of the following items:

Michael T. Morrissey	$500
R. D. Sanders, of Jackson, Miss	1,000
A. B. Friend	500

Senator BILBO testified that all contributions for the church and parsonage were deposited in the above-mentioned special account in the Poplarville Bank of Commerce.

It is difficult for the committee to express an opinion on this charge. Although it has no direct bearing upon the awarding or administration of war contracts, this collateral episode, having been injected into the committee's proceedings, had to be explored at once because of the possible unfair implications and inferences resulting from the receipt of this testimony in public hearing, not only as to the integrity of Mr. Anslinger and the Bureau of Narcotics but as to Senator BILBO himself. For this reason, the committee proceeded promptly to obtain the facts, which, in part, had already come to its attention during the preliminary investigation, and ascertained that the charge concerning this conduct on the part of Senator BILBO was supported by information presented to the committee. Having obtained these facts, the committee feels obligated to call them to the attention of the Senate.

Hon. F. T. NEWTON,
Care of Greenville Hotel,
Greenville, Miss.

DEAR FELIX: Senator BILBO called me from Washington last night and asked me to get in touch with you and ask you to meet with us next Monday afternoon, September 7.

Senator will be here in the Royal or down at the Edwards and will be very much disappointed if you are unable to see him at that time.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely your friend,

A. B. FRIEND,
Room 300, Royal Hotel.

APPENDIX III

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1946.

I, Dr. A. J. Podesta, make the following voluntary statement to Joseph M. Mannix, member of the general counsel staff of the United States Senate War Investigating Committee. This statement is made by me voluntarily and without any threats or promises.

I have known John C. Carr all my life. I was born and reared in Natchez and went to high school with his two brothers in Natchez, Miss.

From my records, which I am using to refresh my memory, I have had the following professional contact with Jack Carr:

On August 8, 1944, Jack visited me in Vicksburg for examination and treatment. My examination on August 8, 1944, showed that he was suffering from multiple neuritis and arthritis. He was given by me at this time vitamin B tablets and darthernol. He returned to my office in Vicksburg August 20, 1944, at which time I prescribed the same treatment.

On April 16, 1945, he returned to my office for treatment. The diagnosis at that time was arthritis, cardiac hypertrophy, and chronic morphinism. He was sent to the Vicksburg Infirmary April 1945. At the infirmary he was treated for arthritis and neuritis and, at his request, he was given a reduction treatment from morphine, which the chart at the Vicksburg Infirmary will bear out.

On April 22, 1945, according to my office records, he returned to my office April 22, 1945, at which time he was given a prescription of vitamin B 10 milligrams salicynal and gell tabs, 50,000 units vitamin D to the capsule.

Subsequently, Carr was treated at the infirmary and his next visit to my office was June 25, 1945. At this time he was given a prescription of vitamin B_1, 1 cubic centimeter daily hypodermically, 100 milligrams to the cubic centimeter.

On October 8, 1945, I treated him in my office for coryza—head cold—he was given a cough sirup.

I have not treated Carr at any other time except 1921 and 1922 when he came to my office at Natchez and, to the best of my knowledge, he was suffering from arthritis and neuritis.

Carr, by his statement to me and to the best of my knowledge, had made several attempts in institutions to break the narcotic habit, twice that I know of personally, when I treated him at the Vicksburg Infirmary. He claimed that after each of these treatments that he took, that in a short time the arthritis and neuritis pains returned and that he suffered from shortness of breath. After the first time I had him in the Vicksburg Infirmary he was given the reduction treatment for the morphine habit, of which he had taken only small doses. He, on returning to me, stated that the arthritis and neuritis pains were so severe that he tried to relieve them by drinking alcoholic intoxicants. He was admitted by the Vicksburg Infirmary again for treatment on ——— for acute alcoholism. I suggested to him to allow me to give him the reduction treatment again for this narcotic habit but he said he could not take it as he was suffering too much and he left the institution. Some time later he came to me and asked me if it was possible for him to get a Government permit to procure enough morphine to relieve his suffering. I told him that I was under the impression that if he could get two or three licensed physicians to certify that he needed a certain amount I thought the Narcotic Division would grant this permit. When he returned he told me that the doctors who had treated him for years were either dead or in the Army. He said there was one doctor in Natchez, who had treated him, who had agreed to give him the certificate. He later brought the doctor's certificate to me and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the doctor certified that due to arthritis and neuritis and the cardiac condition, and, I think, an asthmatic condition that he, the doctor, felt that this man should have morphine to relieve his suffering and the condition of his health, and I concurred in that opinion. And also taking into consideration the man's age, the length of time in this condition, his numerous attempts to overcome the morphine habit, and the small amount he asked for daily, I felt I was justified in certifying, with the doctor in Natchez, that he should have this small amount daily. I asked him how much it would take for him to keep himself comfortable and he replied 2 or 3 grains. A small amount like this for an addict of 45 years' duration was out of the ordinary.

Mr. Carr asked me if it was possible, through my influence, to get Senator BILBO to expedite the getting of this permit for him. I told him I would be very glad to take the matter up with Senator BILBO and ask the Senator to do what he could in his behalf. Later I contacted the Senator's office for Jack Carr. I am not sure but I believe I contacted Ed Terry.

When Carr returned to Vicksburg and told me he had gotten his permit, and said that he wanted to do something for Senator BILBO, and asked me what he could do, I told him that Senator BILBO was endeavoring to complete the church and parsonage at his home, and Carr gave me $1,000 to give to Senator BILBO for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage.

A day or so later I heard that Senator BILBO was in Jackson. I drove to Jackson, went to the Royal Hotel, went up to his room, where there were two or three other men in the room with him, whose names I do not know. Those present were strangers to me. I had the money ($1,000) in an envelope in 10 $100 bills. I put the envelope either on the bed or the dresser and said to the Senator here is something I was given for the church funds and I left the room. To the best of my knowledge and belief the Senator left the next morning for his home in Poplarville or for Washington, D. C.

I wish to state there was no money arrangement made with Carr at any time by me, that Carr voluntarily came up and asked me if he could do something for Senator BILBO for the assistance the Senator had given him in securing the permit.

I received only $1,000 from Carr. I never did tell Terry that I received any money, especially $1,500, from Jack Carr or anyone.

My intention in the beginning was to help Carr, to relieve him from some of his suffering, and to get him a permit where he could go to a reputable physician in Natchez and get 2 grains of morphine a day that Dr. Logan and I felt that he needed to maintain his health and comfort.

I did not inform Senator BILBO who gave me the $1,000 for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage fund because the men in the room were strangers. To the best of my knowledge and belief, I have not informed Senator BILBO, to this day, who gave this money to me for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage.

To my knowledge, I remember when Senator BILBO sent letters of appeal for his church to his friends in Vicksburg. I collected some of this money. However, I do not remember the names at this minute of those people who gave me small donations which I sent to the Senator in Washington by mail.

Mr. Ed Terry was a patient in the Vicksburg infirmary for X-rays, electrocardiogram, and some other diagnosis tests. He later was in my home 5 or 6 days resting up. I, at no time, told Ed Terry that I received any money, especially $1,500, from Jack Carr or anyone else in Natchez.

As to the time I gave the money to Senator BILBO, I am not certain but I do know that Jack Carr came to me in Vicksburg and told me that he had received a permit from the Government for 2 grains of morphine per day. I kept the money in my safe for a couple of days and then I learned that the Senator was in Jackson so I made a trip to Jackson and delivered the contribution to him.

I have read the foregoing statement and it contains a true statement of facts to the best of my knowledge and recollection.

APPENDIX IV

The following statement was obtained from John A. Carr, of Natchez, Miss., on December 22, 1946, by Joseph M. Mannix, investigator for the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program. This was executed in longhand by Mr. Carr:

"I am 63 years of age; have been user of drugs for 35 years at least, during which time I have taken cures a number of times, twice at Cavington, La., Youngs Sanatorium, once in New Orleans, once in Jackson State Hospital pay ward, twice in Vicksburg, treatment by Dr. A. J. Podesta. After each time my trouble with short-breathing arthritis and other troubles coming back so I could not stand it. I left hospital on second treatment, but later came back asking if something could not be done for me. Dr. Podesta stated he thought the law was if I could get two or more physicians that had treated me give me a letter stating my condition he would try and help me. I got a letter from Dr. Logan, of Natchez, who had treated me a number of times.

"I then went back to Vicksburg showing Dr. Podesta the letter, and he promised to help me. I came back to Natchez, and some time later Dr. Logan told me he had received a permit to treat me. I was glad to hear it as I could not dress myself unassisted. Some 3 or 4 weeks after I received the permit I went back to Vicksburg to let Dr. Podesta see how I was getting along and to thank him for the great favor he had done for me and what I could do to show my gratitude for what he done, and I of my own free will suggested I make a donation to the Juniper Grove Baptist Church. Knowing from reading about it that Senator BILBO was interested in building it, I, of my own free will, wrapped up a thousand dollars in cash from my pocket (10 one-hundred bills and gave it to Dr. Podesta for a donation to this church) I don't know Senator BILBO only by sight. I never had any conversation with him in regards to money about anything before or after any permit being issued me.

"I was born and raised in Natchez. It was not my life's saving I gave, as I was in cafe (Gem) for 27 years and some many years were very good years. Also had one-third interest with two brothers in laundry business, but in later years my health got so bad I decided to quit.

"I am no rich man at present, but I have paid income taxes in the past, and will pay one this year 1946.

"I live within my means, but I have always paid my way as anyone in Natchez will say for me.

"I am a personal friend of Dr. Podesta, both born and raised in Natchez. Went to school together, he in grades below me. He has never charged me for any services due to friendship. This is why he taken special interest in me.

"JNO. A. CARR.

"NATCHEZ, MISS., December 22.

"No one has contacted me in regards this matter lately."

APPENDIX V

NATCHEZ, MISS. December 22, 1946.

Mr. JOSEPH M. MANNIX,
Investigator for United States Senate Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program:

Mr. John Carr is a man approximately 65 years of age but older in senility. I have been acquainted with him for about 20 years and have treated him professionally for the past 5 or 6 years.

His physical condition is poor. He suffers from a severe bronchial condition, arterial hypertension, myocardial weakness, and a very severe type of recurrent arthritis. He has been an addict for years. He has made numerous attempts at treatment at various places for said addiction, all of which were unsuccessful due to his physical weakness.

In August 1945, Mr. Carr requested that I give him a statement as to his physical condition as he wanted to try to get permission for a small amount of narcotic sufficient to keep him on his feet. I gave Mr. Carr this statement. In October 1945, a letter from the Bureau of Narcotics was received stating that sufficient evidence had been submitted indicating a medical need of morphine for Mr. Carr and that the Bureau had no objection to same being prescribed for him. Since that time, I have given Mr. Carr weekly prescriptions for morphine.

I am not sufficiently acquainted with Mr. Carr's financial affairs to give an estimate of his financial condition. As far as I know, he has always paid his obligations.

As to a questioned exchange of money supposedly to have taken place about this time, I have no knowledge whatsoever.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 5, 1946.

Hon. THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN,
Chairman, Committee on Privileges and Elections, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GREEN: On June 28, 1946, I wrote the following letter to you:

"As you probably know, I am a candidate for the United States Senate from Mississippi in the current Democratic primary election, the first primary of which will be held on July 2, 1946. One of my opponents in this race is the incumbent, THEODORE G. BILBO.

"On May 27 of this year I publicly charged that BILBO, while a Member of the United States Senate in the year 1942, accepted from the war contracting firm of Newton & Glenn, then located in Hattiesburg, Miss., four checks, made payable to THEODORE G. BILBO, in the entire amount of $25,000. One of these checks, in the amount of $5,000, in photostatic form, was in my possession at the time the charge was made. The back of this check showed the endorsement of THEODORE G. BILBO and one Robert Gandy. I publicly called on BILBO to explain the nature of this transaction with this firm of war contractors to the people of Mississippi.

"From May 27 to June 27 BILBO refused to make any public explanation. Last night, on the eve of the first primary election, in a speech at Jackson, Miss., widely reported today in the press, he made what is purported to be an answer to this $25,000 question.

"BILBO admitted that he received the four checks from Newton & Glenn. He stated that he endorsed them. He said that the money was a voluntary contribution to the campaign fund of Hon. Wall Doxey, who was then in the United States Senate and a candidate for election to the full term. He said further that the money was turned over to a committee of which Robert Gandy was the chairman and that this committee handled the disposition of the funds.

"There were four candidates in this 1942 race for the United States Senate. James O. Eastland, the successful contestant, Wall Doxey, who entered the second primary with Senator Eastland, Roland Wall, eliminated in the first primary and myself, eliminated in the first primary by a small margin. The first primary was held on August 25, 1942.

"Senator BILBO was an open and active supporter of Wall Doxey in the senatorial race. Mr. Doxey's State campaign manager was Lee Hall, of Columbia, Miss. As required by our Mississippi Corrupt Practices Act of 1935, Mr. Doxey filed with the secretary of state of Mississippi the required report of his contributions and expenditures during this campaign. These reports show contributions of only $4,543 and expenditures of $10,088. Shortly after I made the public charges relative to the $25,000 there was some intimation that the money might have gone to Wall Doxey's campaign fund. Mr. Doxey was interviewed in Washington by the Commercial Appeal, Washington Bureau, and on June 1, 1946, a dispatch was released quoting Doxey as saying he never saw the checks, never heard anything about them until recently, and that the money was not put into his campaign fund. It is my information that Lee Hall, Mr. Doxey's State campaign manager in this primary, takes the same position.

"Last night BILBO, in addition to saying that this $25,000 went into Wall Doxey's 1942 campaign fund, made charges that involve my personal honor and integrity. He charged that there was a deficit in my campaign expenses in the 1942 primary and that approximately $14,000 of this $25,000 was given to me to take care of my campaign deficits. This is a lie out of the whole cloth. No one gave me, or anyone else with my knowledge, one dime to cover a campaign deficit or for any other purpose, nor was such a matter discussed. There were no deficits in my campaign. On the day of the first primary all of my expenses had been paid and I owed nothing. The reports that were made by me, as required by law, correctly reflect my contributions and expenditures. Further, I was then a Member of Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of Mississippi. Immediately after the first primary I returned to Washington to resume my duties and took absolutely no interest in the runoff. My staff was free to support the candidate of their choice and most of them elected to support JAMES O. EASTLAND. I did not attempt to advise them one way or another.

"It is my personal conviction that BILBO did not use one dime of this $25,000 in behalf of the candidacy of Wall Doxey in 1942. But since he is now and was then a Member of the United States Senate, and makes public admission of having flagrantly violated the laws of both our State and Federal Governments, and since my own integrity is involved in this matter, I think it is only fair for me to demand that your committee, which is vested with jurisdiction over such matters, make a full and complete and immediate investigation as to the disposition and use of this $25,000.

"Yours very truly,

"ROSS A. COLLINS.

"P. S.—Of further interest in this matter is the fact that the books of F. T. Newton, one of the members of the former firm of Newton & Glenn, now in bankruptcy in the United States District Court of Hattiesburg, Miss., carry as a doubtful account $20,000 charged to THEODORE G. BILBO. I do not know whether this $20,000 is inclusive or exclusive of the $25,000 that BILBO admits having received."

1. The letter states that the records of a bankruptcy court case at Hattiesburg, Miss., show that BILBO was paid in September 1942 by Newton & Glenn, defense building contractors, the sum of $25,000.

2. That BILEO admitted receiving this money in September 1942 and that he—BILBO—was not then a candidate for public office.

3. That Senator Doxey and his campaign manager, Mr. Lee Hall, when interviewed, stated that the money was not used or expended by them in Mr. Doxey's campaign for the Senate.

4. That the same bankruptcy proceedings carry as a doubtful account $20,000 charged to THEODORE G. BILBO and I do not know—and only investigation will disclose—whether the $20,000 is inclusive or exclusive of the $25,000 which BILBO admits having received.

5. My letter states that it is my opinion that the money paid to BILBO was not used in behalf of Mr. Doxey's 1942 candidacy for the Senate. Hence, the matter is one of public record and an investigation of the record will disclose all of the information that I have and perhaps more, and since the Mead committee is a committee set up to investigate the national defense program and is a well-staffed committee with an ample force of investigators and attorneys, and since Newton & Glenn were defense building contractors and this company paid to a United States Senator a large amount of the company's assets upon which the company must have made a profit, it seems to me that the records of the bankruptcy proceedings should be carefully scrutinized by the Mead committee so that the record facts as they exist may be revealed.

Very truly yours,

ROSS A. COLLINS.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I heard the debate this morning, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] asserted, as I recall, that no charges against Senator BILBO are pending before the Senate. I myself doubt that the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program had any jurisdiction of this matter; that is, so far as using it as a basis for stopping a Senator at the door.

I grant that the hearings, and all the matters contained in them, can form the basis of a charge to be preferred in the future, and referred to the proper committee, which in this case, after reorganization takes place, will be the Rules and Administration Committee. As a matter of fact, that committee will be clothed hereafter with full power to do the very thing the committee of which I am chairman did during the last senatorial campaign.

I repeat, I can see no foundation at all for the Senate of the United States using the investigation and the charges which were sent by the Senator from Rhode Island to the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program as a basis for ousting one of our former colleagues.

Mr. President, I was reading the charge which was preferred against Senator BILBO, and although some of it was read yesterday, I desire to read most of it again, merely to show the nature of it, and what the committee itself has investigated. I read:

The undersigned hereby petition for the redress of the following grievances and respectfully show and allege:

1. The signatories hereto are residents of the State of Mississippi and are duly qualified electors of the State of Mississippi.

2. Whenever the term "duly qualified Negro electors" is used, it shall mean Negro citizens of Mississippi who have duly qualified to register and vote in general or special elections for Federal, State, and local offices, including the office of United States Senator from Mississippi, and Negro citizens possessing the legal qualifications to register and vote in such elections.

3. In the primary of the Democratic Party of Mississippi to select a candidate for the United States Senate for the term commencing January 1, 1947, and in which an election was held on July 2, 1946, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, the incumbent, obtained a bare majority of less than 4,000 votes, of the votes cast and officially counted, over his opponents and thereupon was certified, became, and is the candidate of the Democratic Party of Mississippi for the office of Senator of the United States from that State.

4. By custom, tradition, and precedent, and because of the absence of an organized or effective party of opposition to the Democratic Party of Mississippi within that State, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO is assured of his reelection to the office of United States Senator from Mississippi and, indeed, will face no opposition candidate in the general election.

5. During the aforesaid primary and up to and including July 2, 1946, the date of the election thereof, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO conducted an aggressive and ruthless campaign for his reelection to the office of United States Senator from Mississippi with the purpose, object, design, and calculation to effectively deprive and deny the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi of their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote and otherwise legally participate in the said primary election.

6. Because, amongst other things, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO has been notorious in his hostility toward the Negro people and has exercised all his energies to keep the Negro people in a subordinate and servile status, and because he has become a symbol of oppression and reaction against the Negro people in the estimation of the people of the United States, and particularly in the estimation of the Negro people of the United States, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO had knowledge or reason to know that the overwhelming majority of duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, totaling approximately 500,000 persons, would vote in the said primary election in opposition and adversely to the candidacy of Senator THEODORE G.

BILBO; and it was the intention of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO to frustrate, suppress, stifle, and overcome the opposition of the duly qualified Negro electors to the candidacy of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO in the aforesaid primary, and thus effectively to deprive and deny these electors of their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote and otherwise legally participate in the said primary election.

7. In order to accomplish and effectuate the aforesaid purpose, object, design, and calculation, and to carry out his intention, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO—

(1) Engaged in and inspired systematic and continuous attacks upon the Negro race in general and upon the Negro population of Mississippi in particular, and especially against the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi; these attacks were accompanied by and took the form of vituperative, insulting, abusive, and slanderous statements, holding up the Negro race in general and the Negro population of Mississippi in particular, especially the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, to hatred, opprobrium, contempt, and ridicule.

(2) Exhorted, agitated, and made inflammatory appeals to the passions and prejudices of the white population of Mississippi to foster, stimulate, inspire, create, and intensify a state of acute and aggravated tension between the white and Negro races in the State of Mississippi, and utilized and directed this acute and aggravated racial tension for narrow, selfish, and political purposes, to wit, to prevent and deny the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi from exercising or attempting to exercise their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote or otherwise lawfully participate in the said primary election; and

(3) With willful intent, individually and in concert with others, advocated, counseled, inspired, encouraged, incited, aided, and abetted the white population of Mississippi to commit acts of violence and intimidation against the Negro population of Mississippi, and especially against the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, so as to discourage, frustrate, suppress, stifle, and overcome the desire and intention of the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi of exercising or attempting to exercise their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote or otherwise lawfully participate in said primary election.

8. The conduct, acts, and statements of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and the acts of violence and intimidation against the Negro people of Mississippi, as described above, and accomplished as hereinafter set forth, were crimes against and violations of the criminal statutes and laws of the United States of America and the State of Mississippi.

9. As a direct or proximate consequence of the conduct, acts, and statements of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, as above alleged, wholesale incidents of attacks by white residents of Mississippi upon Negro residents of Mississippi occurred throughout the State of Mississippi during the said primary campaign, including acts of violence and intimidation against duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi; these attacks and acts of violence and intimidation were willfully and wantonly perpetrated (a) by white residents of the State of Mississippi, acting individually or in furtherance of a conspiracy with others or with Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, to deprive and deny the qualified Negro electors of Mississippi of their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote or otherwise lawfully participate in the said primary election, and (b) by white public officials of the State of Mississippi, acting under color of law, with like willfulness, wantonness, intent, and purpose.

10. As a result of the foregoing the Negro people of Mississippi, especially the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, were subjected to a campaign and reign of terror during the said primary election; and the Negro people of Mississippi, especially the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi, were placed in a state of fear, terror, coercion, and duress to the extent that the overwhelming majority of the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi were discouraged, frustrated, suppressed, stifled, fettered, and overcome in exercising or attempting to exercise their constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities to register and vote, or to vote if already registered, or to otherwise lawfully participate in the said primary election; and under the circumstances, such fear, terror, coercion, and duress, followed by the action or inaction above described, were reasonable and reasonably justified.

11. By reason of the foregoing, and as a direct or proximate consequence of the successful accomplishment and effectuation of the purpose, object, design, and calculation of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, and the successful carrying out of his intention as aforesaid, the election of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO as the Democratic candidate for the United States Senate from Mississippi was and is illegal, void, and contrary to law, and such election was and is tainted and permeated with fraud, duress, and illegality. The said election of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO was not free or unfettered, but, on the contrary, was achieved by force and violence and the use of criminal, extralegal, and illegal tactics and in wanton disrespect and disregard and in derogation of the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the United States under the United States Constitution, particularly the fifteenth amendment thereof, and of the laws of the United States in such cases made and provided, and of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as in violation of the laws and statutes of the State of Mississippi.

12. Except for the fraud, duress, illegality, force, and violence, as above alleged, the overwhelming majority of the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi would have voted in opposition and adversely to the said candidacy of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and their votes would have materially affected the result of the said primary election and would have resulted in the defeat of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, or, at least, would have resulted in the failure or inability of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO in securing a majority of the votes cast and officially counted in said primary election, thus necessitating a run-off, which, in all reasonable probability, would have resulted in the defeat of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO.

13. By his conduct, acts, and words, and by reason of the foregoing, Senator THEODORE G. BILBO—

(a) Has violated his oath of office of United States Senator to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States and its laws;

(b) Cannot reasonably be relied upon in the future to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States and its laws; and

(c) Cannot reasonably be relied upon in the future to honor the oath of office required to be made by United States Senators to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States and its laws; and

(d) Has advocated, counseled, inspired, encouraged, incited, aided, and abetted in the violation of the laws of the United States and the State of Mississippi; and

(e) Has exhibited a crass, wanton, and shocking disrespect and disregard for the constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities of the United States citizens to exercise their political franchise to vote in elections for public offices; and

(f) Has demonstrated a cynical contempt for the orderly processes of government; and

(g) Has endangered and undermined the foundations of orderly and democratic government; and

(h) Has subscribed and subscribes to principles, ideas, and philosophies of government which are alien, repugnant, and inimical to the principles, ideas, and philosophies upon which the Government of the United States and the States of the Union are founded; and

(i) Has fostered, stimulated, inspired, and encouraged conflict, division, and disunity amongst the American people by pitting race against race, religion against religion, and nationality groups against other nationality groups; and

(j) Has brought the august and honorable United States Senate into contempt, ridicule, and disrepute; and

(k) Has been and now is a member of the Ku Klux Klan, a secret, conspiratorial, and illegal organization with past connections with known enemies of the United States of America, to wit: the German-American Bund, and has subscribed and still subscribes to the principles and actions of the said Ku Klux Klan, which has committed acts of lynching, near-lynching, assaults and batteries, false and unlawful detentions, and other crimes of violence and intimidation; and

(l) Has demonstrated his unfitness to hold the honorable position of a United States Senator.

14. Annexed hereto and made part of this petition, marked "Exhibit 1," and in substantiation and documentation of the allegations of this petition, are excerpts of statements, speeches, and writings of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO made during the aforesaid primary campaign.

15. Annexed hereto and made part of this petition, marked "Exhibit 2," and in substantiation and documentation of the allegations of this petition, is a photostatic copy of a radio interview between Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and certain newspapermen, held on August 9, 1946, over the Mutual Broadcasting System on Meet-the-Press program.

16. Annexed hereto and made part of this petition, marked "Exhibit 3," and in further substantiation and documentation of the allegations of this petition, are photostatic copies of statements of Negro residents of Mississippi, indicating instances and describing occurrences of acts of violence and intimidation by white residents of Mississippi, including white public officials of the State of Mississippi, acting under color of law, against Negro residents of Mississippi and showing the acts of violence and intimidation practiced against the Negro residents of Mississippi, including the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi and showing further the fraud and illegality practiced against the duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi. The originals of these statements are in the possession and files of the Civil Rights Congress, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y., which directed, supervised, and participated in the collection of these statements.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the last sentence I read, which is strictly in accord with the statement made by me a while ago. The language I just read is as follows:

The originals of these statements are in the possession and files of the Civil Rights Congress, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y., which directed, supervised, and participated in the collection of these statements.

I continue to read:

Other and additional statements showing and describing similar occurrences against other duly qualified Negro electors of Mississippi are in the possession and file of the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

Wherefore the undersigned respectfully petition and request:

(1) The appropriate Senate committee or committees to conduct a full, fair, and fearless investigation into the allegations of this petition and the charges contained therein; and

(2) In connection with such investigation to hold public hearings in and throughout the State of Mississippi and in Washington, D. C., wherein witnesses shall be summoned to testify and give evidence under oath, and such other evidence, including the taking of depositions, as is material, relevant, and pertinent be incorporated in the record; and

(3) Upon the basis of the allegations of this petition and the charges contained therein and the documentary evidence submitted herewith, and any further evidence which may be disclosed as a result of the aforesaid investigation and hearings, the appropriate Senate committee or committees having jurisdiction over the matters herein set forth, report and recommend to the Senate of the United States that Senator THEODORE G. BILBO be impeached and removed from his seat as the United States Senator from Mississippi and that the election of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO as the Democratic nominee for the office of United States Senator from Mississippi be declared null and void, contrary to law, and tainted with fraud, duress, illegality, force, and violence, and that a new election be held for such office; and

(4) The Senate of the United States impeach Senator THEODORE G. BILBO and remove him from his office as United States Senator from Mississippi and declare his election as the Democratic nominee for the office of United States Senator from Mississippi to be null and void, contrary to law, and tainted with fraud, duress, illegality, force, and violence, and deny to Senator THEODORE G. BILBO any and all privileges, rights, and immunities which he may possess by virtue of being elected United States Senator from the State of Mississippi for the term commencing January 1, 1947, and also deny Senator THEODORE G. BILBO the right to subscribe to the oath of office for such new term as United States Senator from Mississippi and otherwise to refuse to seat Senator THEODORE G. BILBO as the United States Senator from Mississippi for such new term.

Then follow affidavits taken by the various signers of the petition. As I indicated a while ago, this petition was signed allegedly by Mississippians, but I believe the record will disclose that no one of the signers of the petition was acquainted with any of the charges that were preferred in the petition. They signed on information and belief.

As the petition itself shows, the data which formed the basis of it were prepared by the Civil Rights Congress, of New York. That organization sent its agents scouring throughout the State of Mississippi, and all the affidavits, all the charges, and all the information that was dug up or found by the members of that organization or persons sent to represent them was furnished to the committee, and we in turn then started our work. We sent investigators to Mississippi to comb the State in an effort to find out what it was all about.

I continue reading from the report of the committee. This is one of the affidavits:

Mr. President, as I indicated a while ago, I have read this petition for the purpose of attempting to advise the Senate what the charges were. There is not one single, solitary line in the petition respecting any charge of fraud, or any charge as to funds spent during the campaign. The petitioners have based their case solely on the ground that Senator BILBO, by word of mouth and otherwise, intimidated Negro voters of Mississippi to such an extent that it is said that by virtue of that fact his election is tainted with fraud and duress, and that he should be denied his seat in the Senate.

In the course of this debate I propose to acquaint the Senate with much of the evidence which our committee obtained in the State of Mississippi, and is contained in these four volumes. I am sure that the Senate will be impressed with the manner and method in which the committee discharged its duty and with the effort put forth by each and every member of the committee to go to the bottom of these charges and to obtain every bit of information which could in any manner affect the election of the Senator from Mississippi.

I shall, in the course of this debate, make known to the Senators what proof was adduced, the manner and method of obtaining it, and the extent to which we endeavored to go to the bottom of all the charges.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator if it is not his opinion that the laws of Mississippi were complied with in the election, and that while the committee made a thorough investigation of the charges, nevertheless it went to Mississippi not only to investigate Senator BILBO, but to investigate the degree of compliance with the laws of the sovereign State of Mississippi. In the general election there was no opposition whatsoever to Senator BILBO. In the primary, in addition to others who had suggested to the colored people that they refrain from voting the colored leaders themselves had told them not to vote because if they did they would in a sense be disenfranchised for 2 years. In 1948 there will be a Presidential election and if they had voted this year they would be forced to vote the Democratic ticket in 1948. Perry Howard, the colored Republican leader in Mississippi, had also requested them not to vote.

Mr. ELLENDER. I desire to say to my distinguished colleague from South Carolina that he has rather anticipated me, because I intend to go into this matter very thoroughly.

As I shall show during the course of this debate, Perry Howard, the Republican national committeeman of Mississippi, published notices in certain newspapers in the State of Mississippi advocating that the colored voters of Mississippi keep away from the polls on July 2. To my way of thinking, that had some effect. I dare say it had more effect than anything that Senator BILBO ever dreamed of saying. As I shall show during the course of this debate, the statements of Senator BILBO had no effect in keeping the voters away from the polls in Mississippi. On the contrary, I think the record will show that in some instances it stimulated many of the voters to accept the challenge of Senator BILBO.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wanted to make certain that the Senator from Louisiana and I understand the record in the same way. It shows that the Republican national committeeman and other colored leaders asked the colored people not to vote, so that they would not be bound to vote the Democratic ticket in the future. When the Senator said July 2 he meant the primary election. They were asked not to vote in the primaries, so that they would be free to vote the Republican ticket in the years to come.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct. That is exactly the reason, as I understand it.

After the committee received the petition, which was sworn to by 30 citizens of the State of Mississippi, we submitted it to our counsel. Counsel looked over it thoroughly and felt that there were sufficient allegations made to justify an investigation. We immediately employed three competent investigators. I, as chairman, invited all my colleagues on that committee, as the Senator from South Carolina knows, to help me obtain the best investigators who could possibly be obtained. We obtained the services of a crackerjack investigator from Iowa, the State from which my distinguished colleague, Senator HICKENLOOPER, comes. That investigator is a very competent man. He went to Mississippi with two others. Those who investigated spent 6 weeks in the State of Mississippi. They covered the whole State and went through practically every county in search of evidence in support of the allegations contained in this petition. Those investigators were aided, I believe, by the group which had previously made an investigation; and they were furnished affidavits and the names and addresses of such persons who could give information which would substantiate the charges which had been preferred against Senator BILBO. After 6 weeks of strenuous effort, the investigators made a report to the committee. That report I now hold in my hand. The written report itself, which I expect to read for the benefit of the Senate, contains 13 pages, and it is accompanied by quite a number of exhibits. Possibly for lack of time I shall not read all the exhibits, but I shall refer to a few of them.

This report was made by the investigators, as I have said, after spending 6 weeks of strenuous work in Mississippi. It reads as follows:

JACKSON, MISS., October 31, 1946.

This preliminary survey and report is predicated upon a complaint dated September 16, 1946 (exhibit A), received by the committee from Mr. T. B. Wilson, 1087 Lynch Street, Jackson, Miss., president of the Mississippi Progressive Voters League, that Senator THEODORE G. BILBO's July Democratic nomination was tainted with fraud, duress, and illegality. The complaint in question, which bears the signatures of 24 Negroes to the petition, as well as photostatic copies of 24 affidavits, demands an investigation with a view to having Senator BILBO denied his seat in the United States Senate on the grounds that his nomination was secured by force and violence, and the use of criminal extra-legal and illegal tactics, which prevented Negroes from participating in the party primary. The original of this complaint is in the possession and files of the Civil Rights Congress, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y., which directed, supervised, and participated in the collection of the statements contained in the complaint, while other and additional statements are in the possession and files of the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

Pursuant to instructions received from the committee, the undersigned proceeded to Jackson, Miss.: Messrs. H. B. Kiley and F. T. Kelly—arriving on September 24, 1946, and Mr. Roy A. Moon on October 2.

Although the minimum of cooperation was to be expected on an investigation of this nature, involving as it did, among other things, traditional deep-rooted racial issues, we did not anticipate a situation practically approximating a total lack of cooperation with which we were actually confronted. Difficulty was experienced in obtaining office space, equipment, supplies, keys, post-office box, and a safe depositary for documents, etc., and our tireless efforts to obtain local secretarial help were fruitless. As a result, we were compelled to take statements from Negro witnesses in longhand at source, wherever they could be located, who for obvious reasons, in many cases, did not deem it prudent to cooperate; also, upon instructions from the committee, in order to avoid possible repercussions in the form of allegations that Negroes had been induced to make statements by the offer of a trip to Jackson, the State capital, and a per diem fee of $3—perfectly legal—no out-of-town witnesses were requested to appear at our office.

On the day of our arrival in Jackson, Senator BILBO took office space in room 512 of the Federal Building, making it necessary for potential Negro witnesses to pass his office en route to our office in room 538. Very few witnesses actually came to our office in the Federal Building, after the appearance of an article in the press entitled "BILBO Makes It Easy for Senate Probers" (exhibit B), whose caption we definitely believe was a misnomer.

Wherever possible, persons mentioned in the complaint were sought out, interviewed, and statements were taken, if procurable. We were in almost daily contact with Mr. T. B. Wilson, president of the Mississippi Voters League, the complainant—

Mr. President, I desire to say that it is my purpose to read to the Senate, after a while, most of the testimony of Mr. T. B. Wilson. I believe that after a reading of the testimony of T. B. Wilson it will be found that the majority report reflects conditions in the State of Mississippi during the election of July 2.

I continue to read from the written report of the investigators:

We were in almost daily contact with Mr. T. B. Wilson, president of the Mississippi Voters' League, the complainant, and through him received a wealth of valuable information, leads, etc. From these initial leads, as well as from other sources, we believe we were able to branch out and cover the State in such a manner as to make our investigation a fairly good cross section of conditions existing prior to and during the July 2 Democratic primary, especially with regard to the difficulty of the Negroes in registering and voting.

According to the 1940 census, there were 1,106,327 whites and 1,074,578 Negroes residing in Mississippi, and in some counties the ratio is nearly 3 to 1 in the Negroes favor. Approximately 200,000 Mississippians served in the armed forces in the last war, about equally divided between both races. No accurate figures on illiteracy are obtainable.

Attached to this report, as exhibit C, is a copy of the official election returns for United States Senator from the State of Mississippi of the primary held on July 2, 1946, to which we have added the total votes cast by counties, as well as the white and colored population by counties, on the basis of the 1940 census returns.

During the course of this investigation interviews were had and statements were taken from legal residents of the following 22 counties, representing a fairly good widespread geographical coverage, in half of which official primary voting statistics are given by color.

In the county of Adams, white population 10,344; colored population 16,885; total registration 3,371; Negro registration 147; Negroes who voted, none.

Claiborne County. White population 3,411; colored 9,398. Total registration and voting not given.

Copiah County. Whites, 16,107; colored, 17,863. Total registration and voting not given.

Forrest County. 23,963 whites. 10,935 colored. Registered and voting not given.

Grenada County. 7,934 whites; 11,113 colored. Registration and voting not given.

Hancock County. 8,955 whites; 2,351 colored. Total registration and voting not accounted for.

Harrison County. 40,742 whites; colored, 10,046. Total registration, 11,000. Negroes registered, 340. Voting, 12.

Hinds County. White population, 51,826; colored population, 55,445. Total registration, 27,386. Negro registration, 414. Negroes voting, 195.

While I am discussing Hinds County, I desire to make a few remarks respecting that county in particular. Hinds County happens to be the county in Mississippi where the great city of Jackson, the capital of the State, is located. In that city there was a colored resident by the name of T. B. Wilson, who was president of the Mississippi Progressive Voters' League, an organization which had been formed by him and others of his race in early 1945 for the express purpose of educating the colored people of that county to vote and to register.

Wilson testified—his testimony is in the record, and I shall read it after awhile—that no effort was made to prevent colored people from registering and that no effort was made to prevent colored people from voting. He said that as a matter of fact in a few instances where a few colored people had been refused the right to register he advised them to go back to the registrar, that he accompanied some of them, and that these men were registered. He said the registrar had asked these applicants to go back home and learn a little more about their Government, and said that if they could answer the questions he would register them. But Wilson testified in no uncertain terms, on more than one occasion, that so far as he knew every colored man and woman who presented himself or herself at the registration office to be registered was registered, and everyone who presented himself or herself to vote on July 2 did vote.

There was no violence of any kind, and, as I have said, with all the effort put forth by T. B. Wilson, with all the effort put forth by a colored man by the name of Green, who was editor of the Jackson News, a colored newspaper, and, who said that for 7 years he had been attempting to educate the colored people of Mississippi to register and to vote—with all that effort, out of a total population of 55,000 colored people, only 414 registered, and only 195 voted. There was no sign of violence whatever in Hinds County. Yet we were confronted with the allegation that the statements of Mr. BILBO, the language he used, and all that, prevented the colored people from voting and registering in the State of Mississippi.

I am stating this in advance for the benefit of the Senate. I know Senators are listening, and I am going to read to them after a while the testimony of T. B. Wilson.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wish to remind the Senator that by the term registration, as it is so often used, he means registering in the party.

Mr. ELLENDER. Under the Mississippi law, as I understand it, I believe the record shows, it is not necessary to declare a party affiliation, but the person comes before the registrar and all he need do in order to register is to sign an oath. Then there is another portion of the registration law which states that when he comes to vote he can be challenged unless it can be shown that he did support the party for 2 years.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. And one of the reasons why a larger number have been registered and a smaller number have voted, was not because of racial trouble, but because they had to take an oath to support the Democratic Party for two further years. Is not that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not know. The evidence on that point is a little bit conflicting. What I think the Senator has in mind is in respect to the voting.

Mr. MAYBANK. Voting is what I referred to.

Mr. ELLENDER. There were quite a number of colored people who presented themselves for voting and who were challenged because of the fact that they did not declare, or, for some reason, could not declare whether or not they had supported the party for 2 years.

I may say further to the distinguished Senator that, as he will remember, the evidence shows that the July 2 primary was the first primary in the State of Mississippi in which any serious effort was made by the colored people of Mississippi to participate in a Democratic primary election.

Mr. MAYBANK. They have participated in the general elections?

Mr. ELLENDER. They have participated, no doubt, in general elections.

Mr. MAYBANK. Aside from colored people, there were white witnesses present who said they had voted in the primary?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. They also said they had taken the oath to uphold the laws of Mississippi, and to support the nominee in the general election?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is true.

Mr. MAYBANK. They said, however, that they had not done so?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is not a question, therefore, affecting only colored people?

Mr. ELLENDER. Oh, no.

Mr. MAYBANK. It affects white people, as well. There is a continual reference to the colored people. There were white witnesses present, as the Senator knows, representing several different churches in Mississippi.

Mr. ELLENDER. We had several white witnesses who had voted, and who acknowledged that they had voted in the primary election, July 2. They had also voted in the general election, November 5. They claimed they had unwittingly violated the law of Mississippi by not supporting BILBO, because every Democrat who voted in the primary on July 2, whether for BILBO or for someone else, and who chose to vote in the general election November 5, was obligated under the law of Mississippi to support and vote for the Democratic nominee. Many of them violated that provision of the law.

Before I began to comment on the vote in Hinds County, I was reading, at page 4, from the report of the three investigators that were sent by the committee to the State of Mississippi. As I indicated a while ago, Hinds County, with a white population of 51,826, and a colored population of 55,445, shows a total registration of 27,386, of whom only 414 were colored; 195 voting.

Jackson County shows a white population of 16,214; colored, 4,160.

Jones County, a white population of 35,061; colored, 14,088. In Jackson and Jones Counties the total registration is not shown.

Lauderdale, with a population of 35,435 white, 22,810 colored, shows a total registration of 12,000, of whom 188 were colored. Twenty-seven colored persons voted.

Leflore County shows a white population of 14,394; colored, 38,970, with a total registration of 4,345, of whom 26 were colored. No colored person voted.

Lincoln County showed a white population of 17,833; colored, 9,672; total registration and vote not accounted for.

Madison County, white population, 8,787; colored, 28,711; total registration and vote not accounted for.

Marshall County, white population, 7,556; colored population, 17,965; total registration 2,370; Negro registration 17; voting, 5.

Newton County, total white population, 15,528; colored population, 8,418; registration and voting record not available.

Pearl River, white population, 14,973; colored, 4,152; registration and voting data not given.

Pike County, white population 19,291; colored population, 15,710; total registration, 4,501; Negro registration 19; voting, none.

Rankin County, white population 13,260; colored population, 14,670; total registration and voting record not available.

Sunflower County, white population 17,465; colored, 43,477. That is but one county, with a ratio of almost 3 to 1 in favor of the colored. Total registration 7,715; Negroes registered, 35; voting, none.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Sunflower County happens to be my home county. I know intimately all about the county, and I know that there was no coercion or intimidation of any kind in that county. Was there before the committee proof that any Negro had been refused registration in Sunflower County?

Mr. ELLENDER. I cannot answer directly the Senator's question, but as I recall there were a few such cases from the delta section. Whether that was in Sunflower County or in some other county in that section, I cannot tell, at the moment. There were probably 10 or 15 persons who applied for registration, of whom several were refused, because of their inability to answer questions propounded; others were registered. Whether they were in Sunflower County I cannot say.

Mr. EASTLAND. They were turned down simply because they were not qualified electors; is that not true?

Mr. ELLENDER. That was the testimony, I would say, of the registrar; but quite a few questions were asked which were probably beyond the purview of the Mississippi law. As a matter of fact, some registrars stated—at least one that I remember in particular—that he made it a little hard for the colored people to register.

Mr. EASTLAND. That was an isolated instance.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; that was one instance. He said that that practice had been in effect in the State of Mississippi for many years. I do not have to tell the distinguished junior Senator from Mississippi that since the State of Mississippi got rid of the carpetbaggers in the old days the white citizens there drafted a new constitution in 1890, or amended the existing constitution, so as to have control in that State of its political destiny.

Mr. EASTLAND. I should like to say to the Senator right there that what the Senator said is absolutely true.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is true of every Southern State.

Mr. EASTLAND. And we are going to see that it remains true; we are going to maintain that situation.

Mr. ELLENDER. I believe other Southern States are going to follow the same pattern.

Mr. EASTLAND. We are going to maintain that situation against all enemies, both domestic and foreign.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. Every effort is now being made to do so. The situation has been maintained in the past. I am very hopeful that at some time in the near future we can have a more enlightened citizenry which will be qualified to vote. But it will take a considerable time to educate many individuals in Mississippi. Just stop to think of the conditions which exist in some counties I have mentioned, where the colored population tops the white population in some instances by more than three to one. If the colored people were to be permitted to vote in those counties it would mean——

Mr. EASTLAND. Racial domination in those counties.

Mr. ELLENDER. There is absolutely no question about that. That is something which the South has been fighting against, as I have said, since carpetbag days, and I presume the South will continue in its efforts against such domination.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator from Louisiana realizes that the mental level of those people renders them incapable of suffrage.

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no question about that. That is one of the principal reasons why suffrage is not permitted. The Senator will remember that in the New England States it took almost 250 years to get rid of witchcraft. We still have what amounts practically to voodooism among the colored people in Louisiana. There is no question about that.

Mr. ELLENDER subsequently said: Mr. Secretary, I ask unanimous consent, following my remarks, that the statement of Senator BILBO, of Mississippi, before the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program on December 19, 1946, be printed in the RECORD, together with his response to the report concerning alleged transactions between him and various war contractors.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR BILBO, OF MISSISSIPPI, BEFORE THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM ON DECEMBER 19, 1946

DECEMBER 19, 1946.

Gentlemen of the committee, this hearing has been in progress for 7 days, and I am bold to state, as a Senator of the United States and as an attorney at law able to evaluate evidence, that all that the witnesses have been able to establish is that I am a very poor man and heavily involved in debt, and that I received during all the periods that the investigation has covered but two Christmas gifts, one an automobile and the other living-room furniture consisting of a sofa, three floor lamps, and two table lamps.

The evidence shows conclusively that every assistance or service rendered to me, all of which I am under obligations to repay, was given voluntarily and without any solicitation on my part, with the possible exception of the money that I borrowed to make a property settlement with my ex-wife. I hold the legal title to considerable property, as the evidence shows, but today I own only 120 acres with one house that is free of all encumbrances whatsoever.

I want the committee to understand as they have uncovered all of my private affairs that throughout my life I have operated upon the advice of a very successful old friend of mine who told me when I was a young man that if I ever expected to have anything for my old age I must buy and buy and buy real estate and buy it on credit and then work like h—— the rest of my life to pay for it. This I have done which accounts, in part, for my heavy indebtedness.

Beginning in 1912 when I bought my first home of 160 acres at Poplarville, Miss., which was bought on credit, I have from time to time bought land and built houses until today I own about 3,300 acres of land with about 20 tenant houses in addition to my dream house. In 1917 I borrowed money from the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans and at one time my debts to the Federal land bank amounted to over $23,000, but I have been able to keep my payments current and I have reduced this indebtedness to about $13,000 and I have renegotiated this loan so that my annual payments are now only about $1,200 a year.

I borrowed my first money from the Bank of Commerce, of Poplarville, in 1912 and in my first race for the State senate I increased that debt and today I owe this bank only about $9,500. I have received salaries as Governor of my State for 8 years and as United States Senator for 12 years which were more than enough to pay these two banks all I owed, but instead of paying them I have paid the banks interest at a reasonable rate of interest and used the balance of funds that I collected as a public official in my law practice, and in the sale of timber and other property, in the purchase of more lands, and for the improvement of same.

My plan of operation and management was moving along fairly well until 1938 when I made a property settlement with my ex-wife and had to borrow $21,750 for alimony. At that time I had practically no money at all except the meager savings from my salary as United States Senator which you, gentlemen, know is a very small amount after you pay all necessary expenses and demands that are made upon a Senator to maintain two homes.

I borrowed every dollar of the $21,750 and made a cash settlement with my ex-wife on the 22d of July 1938. No one thought that I would be able to meet this large payment in a period of hard times, but in one week I called upon seven friends and every one responded but one and I raised $22,000. Another friend sent me $3,000 that I did not need and I returned it the next day after the settlement of the divorce. My tug-of-war since then has been to pay this $22,000 and at the same time keep up my other payments, always including taxes and insurance and to continue the development and improvement of my property. I have kept satisfied the Bank of Commerce of Poplarville and the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans and, while I have incurred other debts as I have struggled to pay the $22,000 borrowed in payment of alimony, they have been largely with my life-long friends who are willing to wait until I have worked out of my financial difficulties.

I have never taken advantage of the bankrupt law, notwithstanding I had a partner in the drugstore business at Wiggins, Miss., that took involuntary bankruptcy in my absence and without my knowledge or consent and I assumed the entire indebtedness of the business after the partnership was declared a bankrupt and paid it out by the month during the 4 years that I was Governor of Mississippi the first time. My friends and those who know me know that while I may be delayed in paying what I owe that I finally arrive with the cash.

This hearing is reprehensible to me because there is involved in it a suggestion that as United States Senator I have tried to profit because of my official position as United States Senator. I am not censuring my colleagues, who have been called upon with a list of absurd charges, because you are doing just what I would do if I was in your position. The charges have been made by irresponsible parties and it becomes your duty to investigate and find out the truth and I have tried in every way to help the committee find out the truth. With the possible exception of two after the hearing started, I have not requested to be subpenaed a witness in this case because I was willing to make out my defense by those who were summoned by the committee who were supposed to have first-hand information about all the facts and alleged charges.

I think it is fit and proper before I undertake to discuss the alleged charges that I be permitted in all fairness to discuss and evaluate the two men who are more responsible than anyone else for bringing these false charges to the attention of the Senate committee, and these two men are Ross A. Collins, who filed with the Committee on Elections and Privileges by letter the original charges during the recent senatorial campaign in Mississippi, and my erstwhile secretary, Ed Terry, who has been so free with his wild, hazy, vicious, and traitorous hallucinations.

But before I take up these two gentlemen for discussion I think it is fair to the committee to know that there are two groups in America that have sponsored and waged for many months a foolish and unjustifiable campaign to unseat me as United States Senator.

On November 27, 1946, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People issued a statement for release on November 29, 1946, from New York City. This release was just before a hearing of the Ellender committee at Jackson, Miss., which started on the 2d day of December. The first and second paragraphs of this statement read as follows:

"NEW YORK.—According to an unimpeachable southern source, professional race-baiters, backing Senator THEODORE BILBO's fight to retain his seat in the upper House, were nervously anticipating introduction of a heretofore closely guarded brief, prepared by NAACP legal counsel, assisted by powerful liberals with years of top-level Washington experience. This brief is expected to provide a sensational legal basis for the expulsion of the violently anti-Negro, anti-Semitic Mississippi demagog, when the hearings get under way in Mississippi on Monday. Attorney Charles H. Houston, of Washington, D. C., will represent the NAACP during the hearings.

"Attorney Houston, in Washington today, declared that it would probably require special permission from the special committee in charge of the hearings before the lethal brief, which he considers a most comprehensive one in terms of legal and other pressing elements, can be presented. In his opinion, the NAACP brief will provide the most practical basis for the Senate's right to act in the unseating of BILBO. Mr. Houston is expected to remain in Mississippi at least 1 week and perhaps 2. In addition to the brief, he will carry a substantial amount of photostatic material which he expects to aid materially in the action."

Now, the committee at Jackson, Miss., very properly permitted this "closely guarded brief" which was expected to provide a "sensational legal basis" for my expulsion to be introduced and made a part of the record of that hearing. The title of this brief is "The Case Against Bilboism," prepared by Charles M. LaFollette on October 21, 1946. You will understand that Mr. LaFollette is a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Indiana and was defeated for the Senate in the Republican primary by Senator JENNER.

I want to call this committee's and the country's attention to a statement on page 40 of this much heralded piece of rotten literature, "I want to point out that presently there are two groups now acting in campaigns to eliminate Senator BILBO. One of them is an all-Negro group, which is headed by a man about whom I think it is fair to say that most recognized Negro leaders in America believe can be justly charged with expediency on the basis of past performance. The other group includes Communist Party members and quite a few other people who have been closely identified with Communist-front activities."

Without any reflection on this committee or any intimation that the committee is influenced or controlled by these two groups I do want you to know that all the pressure through press and radio that has sponsored the campaign against me stems from these two groups. These same groups are behind the now famous "Oust Bilbo" organization by these same influences in New York. A copy of their announcement and letters I will introduce a little later in this statement.

These two groups care nothing about whether I received an automobile or incurred an indebtedness of $3,667.90 for building a lake that I had planned for 12 years or more, or anything else involved in this investigation. They want BILBO destroyed and unseated because of my convictions and ideologies which are opposed to the great objectives of the all-out Negro groups and Communist groups of America.

These groups know that I have not been guilty of violating my oath as United States Senator by inciting violence against the Negroes down in Mississippi. They know that I did not do any more than Perry Howard, the Negro national committeeman of the Republican Party from Mississippi, who urged and pleaded with the Mississippi Negroes not to attempt to vote in Mississippi's recent Democratic primaries. They know that I am not guilty of any acts involving moral turpitude. They know I have kept the record straight but they would unseat me because of my views and convictions on racial issues, all because I have been rather active and militant in insisting upon my convictions. They are not willing for me to enjoy freedom of speech as guaranteed by the Bill of Rights.

Now, since Mr. Collins made the first charge and has made himself rather conspicuous at this hearing with his inability "to take it on the chin," let us review some of his record that will account for his action in this behalf. Practically every charge that this committee has investigated is contained in a four-page campaign document which was printed by the hundreds of thousands and broadcast throughout Mississippi in the recent primary election. Regardless of what Collins says, practically all of the matter contained in his campaign circular was furnished by the Judas Iscariot who had been my secretary since January 1939. In this circular which I have read and analyzed I find at least 25 separate, distinct, contemptible, pusillanimous, and limicolous lies. After studying and analyzing the statements of this circular all these false charges were discussed day and night on the stump and on the radio before all the people of Mississippi, and then voted upon by the people of Mississippi. And, notwithstanding the fact that Ross Collins had been the attorney general of Mississippi for 8 years, ran for Governor in 1919 (being defeated and running fourth in the race), and made the race for the United States Senate three times before the recent campaign, which made four times for the Senate, and notwithstanding the further fact that he was Congressman from his home town and district for 20 years, when the votes were counted the 2d day of July he ran a poor third. He received less than 10 percent of the 191,806 votes cast, his vote being only 18,875. He received less than 100 votes in 22 of Mississippi's 82 counties; he received less than 200 votes but over 100 in 28 counties; he received less than 300 but over 200 in 16 counties. He did not carry a single county in the State, nor did he lead in any one county of the State. He lost his home county of Lauderdale and got less than 20 percent of the total vote in that county. I, BILBO, received in his home county 3,013, while Collins only received 1,137. My majority over Collins in his home county was 1,876. Even Mr. Ellis received 1,305 to Collins' 1,137—even Ellis' majority was 168 over Collins in his own home county. To show you how complete his condemnation and repudiation was in his old home district that he represented 20 years in the Congress, where he was born and reared and known, there were 10 counties and the vote was as follows:

The vote on July 2, 1946, in Ross Collins' old congressional district

	Bilbo	Ellis	Collins	Total
Clarke	1,131	310	193	1,757
Jasper	1,157	547	328	2,208
Kemper	733	355	216	1,443
Lauderdale	3,013	1,305	1,137	5,865
Leake	1,005	887	340	2,664
Neshoba	1,436	1,305	806	3,885
Newton	1,171	887	404	2,696
Scott	980	960	384	2,462
Simpson	1,442	726	201	2,633
Smith	1,428	972	262	2,955
Total	13,496	8,254	4,271	28,568

Because of Collins' campaign of lies and misrepresentations in making the charges upon which I am now being tried, and others, he has been the most thoroughly, completely, and everlastingly condemned, damned, and repudiated man in the history of the State. The people of Mississippi have already been appraised of all his charges involved in this hearing and they were all discussed fully and completely with the worst possible construction placed upon every charge which resulted in the defeat of Mr. Collins and my exoneration from these charges was complete by the people of Mississippi in my reelection in the first primary by a majority of 3,834 over 4 opponents in a campaign in which there was polled 191,806 votes.

With such a smashing and lambasting condemnation it is surprising that this man would have the gall and audacity to ever appear as a witness in any hearing and most certainly he is in bad grace when he makes a grandstand play, as demonstrated before this committee, in making claims to the protection of his good name and reputation. If the good white people of Mississippi, men and women, had given me such a beating at the polls I would seek the thickest jungles in the hinterlands and hide in its density and darkness until the resurrection morn.

Now, the other star witness in this case, the modern Benedict Arnold, by the name of Edward P. Terry, I do not know whether to pity or blame, because I sometimes think that he has a mental illness of imaginary grandeur and impossible hallucinations. I am sure you noticed from the newspapers the other day while witnesses were here on the stand proving beyond all doubt that he had stolen or embezzled $3,750 from Wall Doxey's campaign, that he was down at Quitman, Miss., waiting to hear from a New York bank where he was trying to borrow more than a million dollars. And again he says he has wrecked his health working so hard for me and he had increased my financial resources. When I hired this man upon the death of my secretary, at which time he was working for the Farm Security Administration at Little Rock, Ark., where I had secured him a job to come to Washington and become my secretary, I had never heard one word against him. On the surface he was congenial, affable, and pleasant, and I would like to say for the record that there has never been a cross word between us during the 7 years he was in my office except one little incident. But it now develops that almost from the time he entered my office he started his wild chase after ill-gotten gain.

I did not know until after he had left my employment on January 15, 1946, that he ended his career as a banker by wrecking a bank in Calhoun County, his home county, where a grand jury indicted him six times, four for embezzlement and two for fraudulent loans. I understand that by making payments and manipulations he was never tried on these charges.

One of the most horrible things that he committed against me was to open a bank account in the Jackson State National Bank in my name, telling the banker that it was my account and no one could draw the money out except himself, as agent, and BILBO as the principal. When deposits to this account started coming in, the bank called on him for a signature card with my name. Of course, he knew he could not approach me because I would then discover his treachery but, when the bank called on him for a signature card with my name, he sent the bank a facsimile copy of my name to be pasted on the signature card. He placed seven or eight thousand dollars in this account and I never knew anything about it until about the 2d day of December of this year, although the account was opened in 1939. He drew all the funds out of this account except about $200. The bank recently discovered that I knew nothing about the account because I have never written the bank, called the bank, had never been in the bank, had never sent a deposit or written a check on the account. He made all the deposits and wrote all the checks. He was all the time attempting to secure money any way he could from people who were doing business through my office. I trusted him as much as I ever trusted any man on earth and never suspected him until I learned of a telegram he had supposedly sent to one of my constituents, telling him that if he would send him $200 or $300 he would give him the relief that my constituent was asking at my hand.

When he left my office there were 42 files that are known to be missing. I learned later through two reliable witnesses that these files were in Ross Collins' campaign headquarters. However, I am convinced that he took these files more to protect himself than to use them in Ross Collins' campaign. I discovered that he was doing business through my office and in my name with people in Chicago, New York, Dallas, and other places and he was so anxious to deceive the people that he was dealing with, that in many cases he made his secretary use the initials of my personal secretary without her knowledge or consent.

In 1941 he arranged for a Christmas present for me at Jackson, Miss., consisting of one sofa, three chairs, three floor lamps, and two table lamps to be placed in the living room of my island house, which, by the way, is the only furniture in this house that I did not buy myself, and, by the way, the house is completely furnished. He inveigled one of my friends to sign a note with him at the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. for $500 to pay for this Christmas present, and then he proceeded to collect from my friends who were lined up as donors in this Christmas present and put this money in his pocket and later persuaded M. T. Reed, of Belzoni, to pay the note.

This poor man went absolutely wild in his mad desire for money and is now testifying against the man who paid him the second best salary on Capitol Hill, and put his wife on the pay roll, paying her over $8,000, in a desire to help him pay the expenses of keeping his daughter in school. There is absolutely no limit of his betrayal. He even accepted $15,000 which he deposited in the bank at Jackson, Miss., stating that he had got this money from some parties in the north and that the money was to be used in getting Governor Bailey into the race for the United States Senate against me in 1946, this being done while he was still my secretary and he and his wife both on my pay roll. Yesterday you gentlemen of the committee heard his sordid tale of unfaithfulness. His conduct has been so shocking until it is almost unbelievable and incomprehensible, and yet he testifies at this hearing and expects the committee and the public to believe what he says. It always did hurt me to the heart to be disappointed in friends or an associate, and this is one of the greatest disappointments of my life. Again I say I do not know whether to pity him or blame him. I can only commit him to a just God and to my countrymen, whose duty it is for the sake of the public good to mete out justice.

In this case to date and, I repeat, as a lawyer, the evidence has shown only one thing, and that is that I was given a Cadillac car Christmas, 1941, and a few pieces of living-room furniture. I am sure no man or woman will censure me for accepting these presents from real friends. These were presents and highly appreciated gifts, and I am sure that ninety-nine out of every hundred men and women in the country would have gladly accepted such from real friends when they came without any strings or obligations whatsoever. In fact, as to the car, it has been a custom, not only in Mississippi but throughout the country, to make presents to citizens who have been honored by their people. In my State I remember that I received a Willys-Knight automobile when I was elected Governor in 1916. Governor Russell, who succeeded me, received an automobile from his friends; Governor Whitfield likewise received an automobile when he was elected. When I was elected as Governor the second time, my staff and friends not only gave me an automobile but they gave my wife one. Governor Conner received an automobile and a nice home at Jackson from his staff and friends. Governor White, I understand, did not receive a car because he was a wealthy man. Governor Johnson received a $4,000 silver service and an automobile and a fine riding horse on his election. Governor Bailey received an automobile, a $3,750 silver service, and a $5,000 war bond. Senator Harrison, when elected last time, was presented with a beautiful automobile. So do not blame me for accepting a Cadillac when I was elected to the Senate for a second term. It is just an old southern custom—in other words, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." Furthermore, I understand that our last and present Presidents received automobiles as gifts.

And now, before we take up the charges, let me make one observation about one witness, Mrs. Virginia Simmerman, executive secretary to Senator EASTLAND. This poor woman, in her venomous hate, stated that I had fired her after working for me for 6 years because her father refused to make me a loan when I was raising $21,750 to make a property settlement with my ex-wife. It is hardly necessary for me to answer her absurd statement after this committee heard her testify and heard her so completely destroyed as a witness by Colonel Thomas Rhodes, another Mississippian. I am sure the committee now understands why I dismissed her. Her statement about the reason for my dismissal of her could not be true because I received my divorce in 1938 and she remained in my office for 2 years thereafter. I am too much of a southern gentleman to express myself fully about this witness, but I will say, as she demonstrated in her testimony, that she is thoroughly undependable. Her father did lend me $500 on my alimony, and I repaid him, and I have here my letter to him and his reply. As a witness, she is most certainly "a blank cartridge."

Now let us take up the charges one at a time and see just what this investigation shows the facts to be. With reference to the specific charges that you have heretofore advised me you would consider, I most respectfully submit for your consideration the following complete answer and response.

On November 23, 1946, in answer to my wire of November 22, 1946, I was advised by your chief counsel that your honorable subcommittee would hold public hearings on allegations that I had engaged in certain transactions with certain war contractors which were listed. In my wire of November 22, 1946, I had requested that you advise me (1) the nature of the charges against me, (2) the names of my accusers, and (3) whether or not such accusers had sworn to any of these charges.

The response by chief counsel for the committee listed certain specific allegations but failed to name my accusers or to advise whether such accusers had sworn to the allegations made.

Therefore I wired you again on November 29, 1946, thanking you for giving me the nature and cause of the allegations and again requesting the names of my accusers to which your chief counsel again replied that the names of my accusers would not be made known to me but graciously tendering me every power of this honorable subcommittee to have any witnesses I might desire here to testify, providing I would submit the names of such witnesses and the nature of the evidence that such witnesses were capable of producing. I was further advised by your chief counsel that "after such preliminary investigations as to the nature of the evidence such witnesses are capable of producing" you would "determine whether to call them or not."

The charges which you advised me would be investigated were specified as follows:

1. That I assisted various contractors in obtaining cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts for the construction of Jackson Army Air Base, Jackson, Miss.; Key Field, Meridian, Miss.; and Keesler Field, Biloxi, Miss.

2. That I received $26,200 from F. T. Newton, of the Newton-Glenn Construction Co.

3. That I received $6,200 from B. L. Knost, of the Morrissey-Knost Construction Co.

4. That I received $6,000 from Mike T. Morrissey; that without cost to me he built a lake on my premises; that he gave me a Cadillac automobile; that he made certain improvements on my farm while operating it, which operation caused a total loss of approximately $48,000.

5. That furniture purchased for Dream House No. 2 was paid for by war contractors.

6. That I received funds from various persons and deposited them in an account called Juniper Grove Baptist Church, Special Fund by THEODORE G. BILBO, in the Bank of Commerce, Poplarville, Miss., on which account I alone could draw and which money was principally to build a residence owned by me.

7. That a note for $3,000 which I owed to A. L. Shushan was paid by individuals who later were reimbursed by war contractors.

8. That certain of my personal expenses incurred in my office in Washington, D. C., were eventually defrayed by war contractors.

9. That a swimming pool was constructed on my premises without charge to me by St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc.

With your indulgence and permission, I shall take up each of these and give in addition to the testimony you have already heard explanatory of the actual facts my answer not only to the charges but to the very serious implications and insinuations that naturally follow.

"That I assisted various contractors in obtaining cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts for the construction of Jackson Army Air Base, Jackson, Miss.; Key Field, Meridian, Miss.; and Keesler Field, Biloxi, Miss."

To this charge I plead guilty and if I am to be condemned for being loyal to the constituents that it is my happy privilege to represent as United States Senator, then by the same token every worth-while Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in the National Congress, must likewise bear the burden of such condemnation.

In urging upon those in charge of the construction of facilities for the national defense and prosecution of World War II, the use of Mississippians on projects and construction work in Mississippi, I have done no more than has been done by practically all of my colleagues in the Senate and by nearly every Member of the House of Representatives, in urging consideration of constituents.

Indeed, that which I did was in accord completely with the general policy established by the War and Navy Departments in every State as shown by the undisputed evidence in this record from high-ranking officers who were charged with the responsibility of the construction program.

Jackson Army air base

In this instance, I recommended several responsible and qualified Mississippians for this work. Among them was M. T. Reed Construction Co., which satisfactorily completed the work in full accord with the desires of the War Department. I deny that I did not recommend this concern as testified by my former secretary.

This concern received from the War Department through Under Secretary Judge Patterson, the first commendation to a construction contractor for excellency in the history of the Department.

As to whether my recommendation of this and other concerns in any way influenced the War Department in awarding them a contract, you may judge from what General Robins and General Sturgis told this committee.

But during the hearings it was inferred that I may have caused the transfer of jurisdiction over construction from Mobile, Ala., to Vicksburg, Miss. Suppose I did (which General Robins denied); yet the testimony of at least three generals demonstrates that it was for the best interests of the national defense program and the Government so to have done, because

A. Vicksburg is only 42 miles from the site of the Jackson Army Air Base and Mobile is 200 miles away.

B. Vicksburg district office of engineers was better organized and equipped to supervise construction than Mobile.

C. Vicksburg was the more logical office to supervise construction from every viewpoint consistent with speed, economy, and efficiency.

Key Field, Meridian, Miss.

Here the War Department again says that my suggestions of contractors may not have been of any great weight. Nevertheless, the job was done satisfactorily by a combination of Mississippi and Tennessee contractors without any question but that it was up to every requirement of the War Department.

True, one of the associated contractors was my good friend and former campaign manager, A. B. Friend, of Sardis, Miss., who received as his compensation a gross of about $5,000 on a project involving $1,731,129.75.

The innuendo was advanced that Mr. Friend was not qualified to perform the work. War Department scrutiny determined otherwise; results obtained on the job deny the insinuation; and the background of Mr. Friend as to ability, training, and experience is a matter already abundantly in this record.

Bernie Friend is a great organizer, an excellent engineer, and a high-toned Christian gentleman, whose services have been sought by governmental agencies and municipal organizations for many years. I ought to know his ability because he has successfully managed two of my campaigns for United States Senator.

Keesler Field, Biloxi, Miss.

The policy of using local contractors was made by the War Department. It was applied in every State. I recommended my constituents, J. A. Jones Construction Co.

of Hattiesburg, Miss., and Charlotte, N. C., who did, according to the undisputed evidence in this record, over $177,000,000, not counting Oak Ridge, in national defense work, and all most satisfactorily completed.

Newton-Glenn-Knost are three Mississippians, my friends and constituents, who were able to obtain a favorable agreement with Mr. Edwin L. Jones of the J. A. Jones Construction Co. and who satisfactorily completed national defense projects in Arkansas, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Mississippi.

It was intimated that I was responsible for the change by the War Department from a bid basis contract to a cost-plus-fixed-fee contract on this project. The undisputed evidence, however, is that such change was required by Army Air Forces objectives to speed up greatly needed construction and by instructions from the Commander in Chief to pledge all appropriations immediately for the war effort. My efforts in that regard were surely, therefore, in complete harmony with high authority and necessity.

"That I received $26,200 from F. T. Newton of the Newton-Glenn Construction Co."

This charge is made up of two items: One for $25,000 and one for $1,200.

As to the $25,000 item

When Senator Wall Doxey offered for reelection for a full term after serving only 15 months of the unexpired term of the late Senator Pat Harrison from Mississippi, I was deeply interested in the success of his campaign in the primaries for his nomination by the Democratic Party.

I was active in his interest in the first primary in which he was opposed by Ross A. Collins, then Congressman from the Fifth District of Mississippi; by Roland Wall, former WPA director of Mississippi; by Senator James O. Eastland; and by Douglas Smith, of Jackson.

Senator Doxey and Senator EASTLAND were the two high candidates and were in the run-off or second primary, having eliminated Ross Collins, Roland Wall, and Douglas Smith. Between the first and second primaries the friends of both Senator Doxey and Senator EASTLAND were anxious to gain as much support as possible from the forces of the defeated candidates and there was a considerable round of conferences and discussions looking to the accomplishment of success of this desire.

In the first primary there was set up wholly independent of the regular Doxey campaign organization of which Hon. Lee D. Hall, of Columbia, Miss., was campaign manager, a group or committee in which Bernie Friend, Robert Gandy, Forrest B. Jackson, and I, together with others, were quite active. This latter group had its offices in a series of three rooms in the Royal Hotel in Jackson, Miss.

The regular Doxey campaign headquarters was about three blocks west on Capitol Street in the same city, which is the State capital.

At the Royal Hotel, the group had Bernie Friend as a full-time manager with a battery of stenographers, clerks, field men and such personnel as was deemed necessary to carry on the work incident to making speaking engagements distributing literature, contacting local political leaders and doing those things usually and customarily done by friends of a favorite candidate.

This practice was not out of the ordinary but as shown by the testimony in this record was followed by the other candidates for nomination.

To carry on this work and to assist the Doxey campaign in its efforts, it was necessary to have funds. To get the money, letters were sent out, meetings were held and on September 7, 1942, a general rally and pep meeting was held in Jackson. To this meeting Doxey friends from every one of the 82 counties in the State were invited and urged to attend. An appeal for campaign contributions was made at the meeting.

You will observe from the testimony of Mr. Hall that some funds were donated to the regular Doxey campaign headquarters through Mr. Hall after this rally was held. Some donations were made to the group operating from the Royal Hotel, among them a contribution from F. T. Newton of Newton & Glenn of $25,000 in four checks payable to me, which I endorsed over to Robert Gandy who cashed them.

Mr. Gandy brought the money back to the Royal Hotel rooms from which we were working and turned the money over to me as a member of the informal committee or group.

Previous to this, and I believe on Saturday, August 29, 1942, after a series of telephone conversations and conferences with various friends of Ross Collins and friends of Wall Doxey, a meeting was arranged at Collins' suite at the Robert E. Lee Hotel, which is situated about three blocks from the Royal Hotel, in Jackson, one block east and two blocks north.

Robert Gandy, Forrest Jackson, and I went to the Collins suite, and there met Collins, George Butler, Charlie Snow, and Cecil Travis, who were apparently awaiting our arrival. This suite was composed of a living room, bedroom, and bath. Those whom I have named were the only ones present in the suite, and all remained until Gandy, Jackson, and I left at the conclusion of the conference, except that Robert Gandy and Ross Collins went into the bedroom of the suite for a talk about Collins' statement to the press, as will be hereafter related.

After exchanging greetings and having Collins complain about my activities in the first primary for Wall Doxey, I suggested to Collins that he should come on and support or help us elect Wall Doxey to a full term in the Senate.

The matter of Collins' statement to the press came up for discussion. My recollection is that he said that he, Collins, had already prepared a statement. I asked him what was in it. He replied to the effect that he had never submitted any political statement to me and he never would, but said that Bob Gandy was friendly to both and that both of us had confidence in Gandy. He then suggested that he, Collins, and Gandy go into the bedroom of the suite and that Gandy could read what Collins had prepared for release to the press and advise me whether it was satisfactory. He and Gandy went into the bedroom of the suite and shortly returned when Gandy stated that the press release prepared by Collins was satisfactory, which was accepted by me.

Collins then said that he was returning to Washington, where the Congress was in session, and that he would not be openly or personally active in the second primary and that he had released his supporters and friends to vote as each pleased in such primary.

He said, however, that he understood that Cecil Travis and other leaders of his were going to support Wall Doxey and that Travis felt or believed that he could get the field men to work for Doxey in the second primary. Travis agreed that such statement was correct.

Ross Collins then said that as to all other matters and arrangements we could work that out with Travis who was thoroughly familiar with everything and we left, that is Robert Gandy, Forrest Jackson, and I left for the Royal Hotel.

Later that day or on Monday, Robert Gandy told me and Forrest Jackson that it would take $11,000 to be paid to Travis for the Collins campaign set-up. It was my understanding that this covered a deficit. This understanding came from Robert Gandy and Forrest Jackson, who had also talked to Roland Wall about his deficit and who was coming with the Wall Doxey supporters in the second primary.

Robert Gandy and Forrest Jackson reported to me and possibly others of our group that they had agreed to pay Roland Wall $7,500 for his deficit and some miscellaneous accounts that amounted to something over $500, or a total finally of about $8,000 to Roland Wall.

To meet these amounts and other expenditures of the group for the second primary, money was required. Various loans were obtained and various payments were made, some to Cecil Travis for the amount agreed with him; some to Roland Wall on his requirement; some on telephones, printing, stenographers' salaries, and other campaign expenses.

To repay these amounts borrowed and finish meeting commitments and other campaign expenses, it was necessary to get contributions and the rally or pep meeting was held in the interest of Wall Doxey on September 7, 1942, in Jackson, as above stated.

After the rally, several contributions were made, some to Lee Hall and some direct to me. Among the latter were the checks for $25,000 from F. T. Newton. He said that he wanted me to spend it for Wall Doxey's campaign and to do the most good and I carried out his request.

As soon as the checks were given me by Newton I called for Forrest Jackson but he was away and I finally located Robert Gandy on the next day, or September 8, 1942, endorsed the checks, and he went for the money, returning the proceeds of the checks or drafts as they appear to be. I took charge of the money and began spending it for Wall Doxey's campaign. I did the same with other contributions that had come to our group but the Newton $25,000 was by far the largest amount that we received.

That day I recall giving some of the money to A. B. Friend to pay his office workers and for printing bills and other items. Some county workers came in and I gave them some money to use for automobiles to get voters to the polls. Some money I gave to Robert Gandy either that day or the following day or so. That afternoon Forrest Jackson came in and I gave him about $10,000 to pay off a note for $7,500 borrowed from Hattiesburg and $2,500 borrowed from the Deposit Guaranty Bank at Jackson.

Then the entire amount of the contributions was expended by me and the group for the Doxey campaign, including enough to pay Cecil Travis the $11,000 for the Collins set-up and $8,000 for the Roland Wall set-up. All of the time, the campaign headquarters of Wall Doxey both the State-wide organization and several of the county workers from out over the State were asking us for funds and we put out as long as the money lasted and then spent more than we had.

To show you what I mean, let me tell you what occurred at the last of the campaign. Robert Gandy and Forrest Jackson, with A. B. Friend, had borrowed around $15,000 from the banks. We had paid back $10,000 but still owed $5,000. We had agreed to hold up enough money contributed to pay off this note and we tried to do it, despite the continual calls and needs for funds to meet the opposition.

On Monday before the primary of September 15, 1942, we gave Forrest Jackson approximately $2,000 to carry to Meridian, Laurel, Gulfport, and Biloxi to arrange for the transportation of war workers to their home precincts to vote. Monday night at 11 o'clock Forrest was at the Markham Hotel in Gulfport where we called him by telephone to tell him that we had spent into our reserve fund until altogether we had only about $2,000 remaining. We asked what to do about holding up to pay the note or on the note. There were several folks in our rooms then from out in the State requesting funds to pay for transporting voters and there were field workers to pay and other expenses to be paid. Forrest said "Shoot the works." We did and all the money was spent and those boys, Robert, Bernie, and Forrest are still holding the bag on the $5,000 note, it has been paid down to $1,000. You will find it in the bank records that Bill Mounger, president of the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., left with the committee.

So the $25,000 was spent and I did not get a dollar or a penny of it.

As to the $1,200

That was a personal loan by F. T. Newton to me and has been repaid—not a cent of it is owing.

The facts are that I borrowed the money and at the time gave Newton 12 drafts on my personal bank account at First National Bank of Hattiesburg. These were each for $100 to be presented over a period of 12 months to the bank for payment. Newton did not present them to the bank monthly as I had requested him and after several months had passed and I found he was not presenting them I called on him to do so. Then I paid all of them off—I believe $300 one time, $500 another, and finally $400, and thus the debt was liquidated and the $1,200 loan was repaid and Newton returned the drafts to me. And here they are [exhibits].

"That I received $6,200 from B. L. Knost, of Morrisey-Knost Construction Co."

As to the $5,000 item

B. L. Knost made a check payable to me for $5,000 as a contribution to the Wall Doxey campaign in 1942. I endorsed the check to Robert Gandy. He cashed it and spent the money for campaign purposes, as shown by his testimony and accounting for funds which he personally handled in that campaign.

In June 1942 I was in Mississippi and on my way to Washington I saw Bernie Knost in Meridian, had a meal with him, and he asked me how Wall Doxey's campaign for reelection was going. I told him Wall was having some campaign expenses that needed to be met, and he and Mike Morrisey, who was there, said they would give $2,500 each to the campaign to help out. Bernie Knost gave me his check for $5,000 and I called Robert Gandy to come over to Meridian, since he was handling all of the funds at that time. He came over. I endorsed the check over to Robert Gandy and left for Washington. Mr. Gandy has accounted for this amount of which I got not one cent and never had any of that money in my hands—the check just passed through my hands to Mr. Gandy.

As to the $1,200

In November 1941 I needed some money and borrowed $1,200 from B. L. Knost. I gave him 12 drafts for $100 each drawn on the First National Bank of Hattiesburg, dated monthly over a period of 12 months. Like the Newton draft they bore no interest—in other words we just swapped checks. Mr. Knost did not present his drafts, although I called on him to do so. I have paid him $750 and owe him a balance of $450 which I intend to and will pay. This is purely an indebtedness, and I have had several of them in my time.

"That I received $6,000 from Mike T. Morrissey; that without cost to me, he built a lake on my premises; that he gave me a Cadillac automobile; that he made certain improvements on my farm while operating it, which operation caused a total loss of approximately $48,000."

I'll break these down into items for convenience and clarity.

The $6,000 is made up of two notes—one for $5,000 and one for $1,000, both secured by mortgage on about 1,100 acres of land in the Gum Pond place, which I have sold under contract for $26,000 to be concluded as soon as abstracts can be prepared and title approved. I will be required to liquidate the $6,000 mortgage debt to transfer good fee simple unencumbered title. This indebtedness and some of my others can be paid when the sale is finally concluded. This item and charge is therefore "much ado about nothing" for it soon is "gone with the wind."

Here are the original notes now renewed [exhibits].

The lake

The lake is a 15-acre pond when the full water level is reached, and Morrissey charged me for it as shown by letter of February 19, 1942, mailed then, enclosing statement of December 1, 1941, already exhibited in evidence here. The cost of the lake was $3,671.92, which I owe and which I intend to pay when funds are available. With the sale of the Gum Pond place referred to just above, I can pay off several of these debts which I owe. I have never denied or failed ultimately to pay an honest debt. I may be slow but I am sure to pay. I always arrive.

New Cadillac car

Yes; Mike Morrissey gave me the new Cadillac car for a Christmas present in December 1941. This is the third car that has been given me by my friends; one when I was Governor of Mississippi the first time, another when I was Governor the second time—and they also gave my then wife a Cadillac, all as pointed out hereinabove.

There are very good precedents for automobiles to be given to public officials and without any criticism or insinuation that thereby anything illegal or immoral was done.

I therefore deny that there was any wrong on my part in accepting the automobile as a Christmas present from my real friend since 1923.

Farm improvements

I made a contract of rental of my farm with 2 tractors, 1 truck, farm tools and equipment, 6 farm wagons, 75 head of cattle, 50 head of hogs, 2 saddle horses, 13 mules, a drove of ducks, a drove of turkeys, a flock of guineas, a flock of geese, and a flock of chickens. Morrissey was to pay taxes and give me one-half of the profits, if any.

The farm includes a pear orchard, a pecan grove, and a tung-nut grove. When it came back to me at the end of the 4-year period I had 1 tractor, no truck, 1 wagon, few farm tools or equipment, 30 cows, no hogs, 1 horse, 2 mules, 1 drake, 1 gobbler, 1 guinea, 1 gander, and 1 white rooster—and 1 year of taxes had not been paid and I paid these taxes of about $1,100 and will apply it against my debt to Morrissey. I received no profits and my pears, pecans, and tung nuts were all sold by Morrissey. Mike Morrissey made no payment improvements on the property except terracing the land and made no repairs to any improvements there during the 4 years. He kept his superintendent in my home without any rent and rented out my tenant homes, and he stayed there himself for long periods of time. The Triple A paid for the terracing he did which could have been done whether he had the property or not.

Now tell me what profit did I make out of that deal even though Mr. Morrissey lost $48,000 in the transaction as reflected by his income taxes? Where am I to be condemned or censured for anything in this transaction and what connection has it with the national defense program?

"That furniture purchased for Dream House No. 2 was paid for by war contractors."

This is absolutely untrue and I specifically deny the charges and the insinuations contained in such allegations. I hold in my hand a Christmas card purporting to be signed by the following: Robert Gandy, W. M. Mounger, F. T. Newton, Edward Terry, Willie Terry, Martha Terry, Leland Speed, Bernie Knost, Ed Gatlin, Junkin.

I now offer this as an exhibit. I am now informed that some of those whose names appear on this card paid from $50 to $75 each to Edward P. Terry, my former secretary, and he practically admits it by his own testimony, and that he took similar amounts from other friends not here listed sufficient to more than pay for the $500 worth of furniture, to wit, one sofa, three chairs, three floor lamps, and two table lamps, but Terry did not pay the note signed by him and endorsed by Robert Gandy at the Deposit Guaranty Bank in Jackson with the money which Terry collected from my friends. He evidently put the money in his pocket or in the special account at the Jackson State National Bank, which account I had never heard of until a few days before the hearing at Jackson, Miss., on December 2, 1946. Then Terry got my good friend, Maurice Reed, to pay this note at the bank and had Reed make the check to "Terry & Co." when there was no such concern in existence.

With the exception noted before the furniture in Dream House No. 2, or Dream House, "Junior," was bought and paid for by me. Most of it came from Sears, Roebuck & Co. and I paid for it on the installment plan.

This house is a California-type rambling bungalow to be used as a study or library. The house has a living room, two bedrooms with bath, dining room, kitchen, luncheonette, and three porches. On one of the porches there is, in connection with a large rock chimney, a barbecue pit.

This house is completely furnished, including tables and chairs for the three porches. The furniture that was sent as a Christmas present by Ed Terry and the friends referred to above forms only a small portion of the furniture of the living room in this house. I have two mounted deerhide rugs in the living room that cost me about $85. The living room also contains another sofa and several other chairs that were transferred from Dream House No. 1.

I purchased a Cold-Spot refrigerator on December 24, 1941, from the Hattiesburg store of Sears, Roebuck & Co., also on the installment plan, which cost me $190. I bought some additional furniture, bathroom fixtures, kitchen fixtures, and venetian blinds from Sears, Roebuck. In the luncheonette is one table and benches, a counter and shelves. The crockery or glassware was given me by Mr. J. W. Daniels, Jr., of Hattiesburg, Miss., who was not a war contractor at any time.

As soon as the island was completed I had my old friends, Smith & Norwood, who have been my architects for 25 years, to prepare plans and specifications for the construction of the study or lodge on the island. I constructed this house myself with the assistance of Mr. Tom Massingale, of Hattiesburg, and under his direction and the direction of the architects the work was carried on, and it was my pleasure to be present part of the time.

In securing the materials for this house I wrecked a four-room residence on some property that I owned at Poplarville. This was a nice little home, ceiled with beaded ceiling, weather boarded, and with two fireplaces. I placed all the brick and lumber on the island to begin construction of the Dream House No. 2. I bought the cement, hardware, and most of the other lumber for the house from Trenton Supply Co., amounting to about $2,000, as has been testified by the manager of the Trenton Supply Co., for all of which I paid on the installment plan.

I purchased the columns and outside timbers, which were heart cypress, from Mr. G. H. Williams, of Picayune, Miss., and hauled it to the island on my farm truck. These timbers cost me close onto $100. I bought the flooring from the Nachary Builders Supply Co., of New Orleans, La., for $722.50, paying $222.50 cash and the balance in five monthly installments. This was a plastic tile floor.

The trusses in the large room in this house were given to me by some friends of mine who owned a sawmill at Gulfport, Miss. These four trusses were put together with bolts and this is the only place I could find the timbers of sufficient dimensions from which to cut the trusses. This sawmill was owned by Baxter, Wheat, Cue, and Gex, four good friends of mine, and they refused to accept any pay for these special timbers—they were not war contractors. Of course this was a small item.

"That a note for $3,000 which I owed to A. L. Shushan was paid by individuals who later were reimbursed by war contractors."

No war contractor paid a dime on this note nor reimbursed, so far as I am able to find, any individual who paid and retired the note. Here is the way Shushan became involved in this $3,000 loan. Mr. Grant Stewart, a wholesale merchant of New Hebron, Miss., was one of the seven men that I selected when I started out to raise the $21,750 to pay alimony to my ex-wife. He was the first man I called upon. He told me that he did not have the money because he had just bought out his two partners and paid them $7,500 in cash. I told him I knew that but I knew that he had sources from which he could get me $3,000. He hesitated a moment and said, "Yes, I know where I can get the money," and he assured me that he would be at my home for luncheon on July 21, 1938, and he pleasantly reminded me of the fact that he was very fond of chicken pie. At 11 o'clock on the morning of July 21 he arrived at my home and delivered the $3,000. He did not tell me where he had got the money, but shortly after he called me and said he wanted me to meet Mr. Shushan at Pearl River, La., which I did, and it was then I learned that he had borrowed the money from Shushan. After a conference with Mr. Shushan, which lasted only about 5 minutes, we separated and the next time I saw him he was in Washington and he asked me to carry him down to talk to Mr. Winchell in regard to his civil suit involving his income taxes. I did it both because I appreciated what he had done for me through Mr. Grant Stewart, although I did not know at the time, and for the further reason that he was a constituent of mine, having a branch wholesale business in Jackson, Miss. I would have rendered him the same service if he had never loaned Grant Stewart a cent and you will remember in his testimony he insisted that he made the loan on Grant Stewart's account and not on mine.

The testimony before this committee about the payment of this loan took place in my absence, but I believe that it is a true story of how the note was paid to Mr. Shushan.

After this settlement I paid Mr. Stewart on the 3d of July 1941 the $750 that he contributed in the payment of the note to Mr. Shushan and here is a canceled check for the $750.

I am informed that Mr. Forrest Jackson refunded Mr. Terry the $750 that he was to contribute in the agreed settlement; however, as a matter of fact, my information is Mr. Terry paid only $500 at the time and Mr. Stewart advanced him the other $250 of the $750 that he was to pay. My information has always been that Mr. Jackson paid Mr. Terry his $500 and sent the $250 that Stewart advanced to Terry direct to Mr. Stewart.

I still owe on this alimony nightmare Mr. Jackson $1,500 and the president of my bank, Bob Newton, $750. In due time I will get to them. So you will see, gentlemen, that there was no war contractor connected in the remotest degree with the Shushan note and its payment, notwithstanding Drew Pearson.

"That certain of my personal expenses incurred in my office at Washington, D. C., were eventually defrayed by war contractors."

This charge I deny. I have heard the witnesses here testify that from time to time several of them on the insistence and request of my erstwhile secretary, Ed Terry, had advanced to Mr. Terry what he represented to be payment of telephone, telegram, and printing accounts. During the time that Mr. Terry was in my office he used long-distance telephone and telegrams to great extent to carry on his personal contacts in various States as well as the State of Mississippi. Many of these telegrams that he sent were not such as would come within the purview of official business for a United States Senator. All of the telephone bills had to be paid as a personal expense. It now appears that some of them were paid by my friends, but this was without my knowledge, acquiescence, or consent. I have never personally requested anyone to take care of any of my personal expenses whether he was a war contractor or a personal friend and constituent. It is a notable fact that every employee in my office can verify that Mr. Terry, while he had almost absolute control of the management of the office and dealing with my constituents, never brought to my attention any of these telephone bills and neither did he ever file any of these bills in the office. They are all gone.

As to printing bills there may have been some special matters that I had printed which could not be printed at public expense on which some of my friends, through Mr. Terry, volunteered contributions; especially is this true in the publication of various and sundry speeches that I made on the floor of the Senate.

Surely I am not to be condemned or denied my seat because of anything disclosed with reference to this particular charge, or any of the others as for that matter; especially is this true when the miserable, sordid, and treacherous record of an unfaithful secretary has been so thoroughly exposed in this hearing.

"That a swimming pool was constructed on my premises without charge to me by the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc."

The St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., is owned by my very good friends, John H. Junkin and his brother, William Junkin, of Natchez, Miss. They have both been my personal and political friends for many years and this company has been in existence for a half century, having been originally organized by the father of these two fine men. They are most certainly not what you would call "war contractors." They were selling to the Army engineers and Government contractors mixed concrete for which they had obtained their contract by reason of the fact that they were low bidders to the Mobile district office for the Keesler Field job.

I had prepared the swimming pool in question by constructing the forms, putting in the reenforcing steel and had the sand and gravel on the ground and most of the cement, and I had already provided a second-hand mixer to prepare mixed concrete to pour in the forms and around the reenforcing steel, when Mr. Junkin, an expert at the job, came to visit me. He offered to do the work for me at a figure which I considered reasonable. He sent up a mixing machine and his employees and workmen. They took my sand, my gravel, my cement with the exception of about 100 sacks that he furnished me at 60 cents a sack, and never at any time did it occur to me that he was doing it as a gift, and when he delayed sending me the bill I took the matter up with him and asked for the bill.

True the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., has never made any effort to collect the account nor has the obligation been canceled. They only transferred the account from the St. Catherine Gravel Co. to the personal accounts of the two owners. I consider it a just obligation and I propose to pay them for the part of the work they did on the swimming pool, which is not finished by any means. I have recently bought a carload of sand and a carload of gravel that is stacked on my yard beside the pool to finish the concrete work. I have the light poles and the underground leaded wiring stored in my barn and the piping on the ground to finish the job. I attempted to do it some time ago but the best price I could get on the tile was $1,400. I thought this was excessive and today the pool is about half finished and it has never been used by anyone. I am still "doing my swimming" in Wolf River which is 4 miles from my dream house.

"That I received funds from various persons and deposited them in an account called 'Juniper Grove Baptist Church, Special Fund by THEO. G. BILBO,' in the Bank of Commerce, Poplarville, Miss., on which account I alone could draw and which was principally to build a residence owned by me."

I deny, resent, and detest the vile implications of this reprehensible charge. Every cent that I have ever received for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church fund, which included funds collected to build the church building and funds collected to build the parsonage and to fence and beautify the grounds, has been spent on this worthy project except the balance of the funds now on deposit in the special fund account in the Bank of Commerce at Poplarville, Miss.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I trust you will be patient with me while I give you the real picture of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church program of improvement. My sainted father led in the organization of the first church house on this sacred spot in 1856. The first house was a log house, there being no sawmills nor lumber available in this wild and unsettled section of Mississippi at this time. This log church house was a one-room house and it was built before my father built his first home in that year and he secured permission from the then small church to permit him to live in it until he had finished his home, which is about 1,500 feet from the present church site.

The first sawmill in that section was a water sawmill with a saw that went up and down and the only power to operate it was falling water from a small creek 4 miles away at the Odoms homestead. The log house was removed and a plank house was built with 12-inch planks and batting, uncelled and hand-made benches.

As the country developed, a steam sawmill came along with a planer, and beaded ceiling was available. The old plank church was torn down and a modern, up-to-date church was erected; that is, modern for that day and generation.

When I became Governor of Mississippi for a second term and became the owner of my father's old homestead, I dreamed of building a befitting memorial to my father's name and at the same time benefiting the community—first the best and prettiest church house and pastor's home of any country church project of the entire South; then I proposed to build on the spot of my father's old house, which he erected in 1856 and in which I was born and our family was reared, the best and prettiest home in Mississippi.

I employed a young architect by the name of Vinson Smith and told him of my dream, and after 3 or 4 years of drawing plans and changing plans I had him to make out a bill of materials both for the church and for my home, and I commenced a long struggle to gather together the material to build these two structures. The church gave me carte blanche authority to tear down the weatherboarded and celled wooden church building, and I laid the foundation of the church and my home on the same day.

My community is a poor community. There is only one member of the church that has any wealth at all, and at that time he was not a member of the church. I commenced to collect funds in 1928 from anybody and everybody, at home and abroad, to help carry out my dream of this beautiful church, with all that goes with it. In my first drive I was able to get far enough along with the church so we could use it, but it was far from completed.

The church membership never had anything to do with the building of it and had nothing to say about the plans. It was all left up to me, and while I had collected and spent about $20,000 in the original effort I am safe in saying that the whole community had at that time less than $800 in it.

After I became Senator I inaugurated a new campaign to get the money to finish the church, build the pastor's home, a garage, laundry, servant's house, chicken house, and the barn, to be surrounded with a beautiful colonial fence. I have no apologies to offer anyone in my strenuous efforts to collect enough funds to finish this job.

The first thing I did when I became the owner of the property was to deed the church two additional acres to enlarge the cemetery and the church grounds, my father having deeded 2 acres before then for the church and cemetery. There has been read into this record a copy of one of the many thousands of letters that I have mailed out. The letters I sent out were to bankers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, contractors, and people generally of every faith, and I have received funds from Methodists, Baptists, Catholics, Jews, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, saints, and sinners. I was chairman of the finance committee and the building committee. The church members as such did not ask or participate in any of my plans and the members of the church that worked on the job were paid like any outsider was. The special fund of the church, which was under my control because I had collected every dollar of it and for which I felt that I was trustee and responsible for the proper expenditure, had nothing to do with the other committees of the church proper. Mine was an outside operation but was for a definite religious purpose. The people who contributed this money had faith in me and believed that the money would be spent honestly and I resent more than everything else connected with the campaign that Ross Collins made against me and with the insinuations in press and over the radio that I would touch a dollar of money that was given and dedicated to the cause of the Christian religion. Gentlemen of the committee, it was a sacred fund and I want you and the world to know that if I ever forget the teachings of my sainted father and want to get money wrongfully I would never start by stealing from the church.

There was no difference in the money contributed so far as the church and the pastor's home and the fence around the premises were concerned. It was a common fund for the entire project and the first few thousands I received I used in finishing the church; in fact, I finished the church before I commenced the work on the pastor's home. I had a very good reason for maintaining control of the funds and I think my church community understood that there was no one connected with the deacons who controlled the church that knew just what my dream was nor were they experienced in building.

It is true that the pastor's home and all the buildings that go with the project outside of the church and the church house itself were constructed on land which I owned, or rather, held the legal title. I knew and my church knew that these buildings were being erected upon my land and that the Bank of Commerce and the Federal land bank had mortgages on this land but I knew that at any time I wanted to get a release from these banks I could do it. The church did not undertake to interfere with me or exercise any control over what I was doing while I was building and finishing the church proper. I had announced that I would not deed the pastor's home and buildings to the deacons of the church until I had finished and furnished the home. I did not want anyone to change the plans or "butcher up" the job.

When I was stricken with an illness in 1944 and was rushed to Mayo's Clinic at Rochester, Minn., I knew the operation that I had to undergo was a dangerous operation and there was a chance of my dying in this operation. I was in a hospital at Vicksburg, Miss., when it was decided to send me to Mayo's and against the advice of my physician I returned to Poplarville, sent for my lawyer, and he dictated the deed. I called for the chancery clerk and placed the deed in his hand and instructed him that in case of my death to turn this deed over to the deacons of the church. At the same time I made my will, a copy of which I have here in my pocket, in which I set up a memorial commission of fine and high-class men of the State—my friends—to carry on after I was dead. I gave them the authority and the instructions to sell all my property except my dream house which I knew would release the mortgage from the church property which I had deeded.

During the war I tried while I was here in Washington to get the men with whom I had contracts to finish the pastor's home and then I called on Brother Smith, who had become pastor, and asked him to assist me in getting the contractors back on the job. The electrical job was under contract with Mr. Smith; the plumbing was under contract with Mr. Bennett; the painting was under contract with a Mr. Parker. The plumber got sick and went to the hospital. The electrician's father became very ill and he had to stay at his bedside for almost a year. The job has been rushed as rapidly as it was possible under the circumstances. Material because of war conditions became hard to get, almost impossible to get. I deny that at any time I ever said or had thought of delaying the job to keep the present pastor from occupancy. It made no difference to me whom the people called as pastor. The money I had and the work I was doing was for the Lord and not for some individual. It was for the community in which I was born and reared and I resent more than I am able to express all the dirty insinuations that have been made by the politicians and my enemies that I was not cooperating and doing my best to finish one of the dreams of my life.

I have enough money in the bank to finish the job and I have every assurance that it will be finished by the 1st of January or before. In fact in consultation with the pastor and the church we have set April 27, 1947, as the day upon which the dedication of the church and pastor's home will be had, at which time the entire church understands I am to make the formal delivery to the deacons of the church of the title and all that goes with it to the church; but, however, the chancery clerk of Pearl River County holds in his hands now a corrected deed and the two banks have released their mortgages on the lands upon which the pastor's home and other buildings are located.

If my pastor, my deacons, and my church membership are satisfied and happy over the way I have handled the funds that my thousands of friends have contributed to the realization of this great dream, then pray tell me why and how anybody on earth could object.

Now, gentlemen, I have answered as fully as time would permit the charges enumerated in the statement given to my attorney, Mr. Jackson, by your Mr. Meader. Many statements have been made that I would like to discuss, but it would take too long to list and itemize the many things that I would like to discuss. However, before concluding, I do want to make special mention of one fact that has been developed in this hearing, and to my mind it is the most horrible thing in the case, and that is the story of my secretary, Ed Terry, secretly opening an account—secretly as far as I am concerned—in the Jackson State National Bank, in which he listed me as principal and himself as agent, and hypocritically telling the banker that they were authorized to pay out money from this special account by check that I might write on the account. He went so far as to state that the money belonged to me, yet when the bank called on him for a signature card he faked and sent a facsimile of my signature; and a second time the bank called on him to send the signature card which he has never to this good hour done. Now he says this was my account, and he told the banker I had a right to draw the money out, but I never knew until about the first of this month that such an account was in existence when Mr. Quinn showed me the correspondence in reference to this mysterious account in his bank. The records show that $6,000 or $7,000 were placed in this account, and $4,000 or $5,000 were placed there after March of 1940. All the deposits after this date, he said, were my money that he had collected for my campaign of 1940. Now the records show that this money was drawn out by Mr. Terry's checks in amounts varying from $10 to $800. No one knows but Mr. Terry where this money went, because neither my campaign manager, nor I, nor anyone connected with my campaign in 1940 ever received a dollar of this money or knew anything about it so far as I have ever been able to ascertain. Surely none of this money was used for Mr. Terry's expenses in 1940, because he traveled with me on my speaking tour, and I paid all expenses with campaign funds that I received. And the astounding fact is that he has claimed about $1,800 of the money that he expended in this campaign and has called on my friends to pay this money, $1,100 of which was paid to him by my attorney, Mr. Jackson, as shown by exhibit in this case.

Of course, you understand that Mr. Terry was at that time my private secretary and was, according to my information, the second best paid man on Capitol Hill, and he drew his salary straight through during the campaign, and yet he charged my campaign with $1,800 expenses and spent $5,000 or $6,000 of my money or money that he says he collected for my campaign, but unfortunately for the poor, miserable creature, the records show that a large portion of this money was drawn out after my election and there is still $200 in the account.

In his wild and reckless lying statements as a witness on yesterday he told the story of a doctor that had collected $1,500 from a drug addict and said the doctor told him that he, the doctor, had turned this money over to me. It is a lie out of the whole cloth and I want the world to know it. We have asked that the doctor be brought before the committee and permitted to tell the committee the truth about this dirty, contemptible fabrication.

This statement would not be complete without a reference to the greatest act of betrayal of trust, faith, loyalty, and confidence as admitted by my ex-secretary, Ed Terry, on the stand yesterday when he told the story of accepting on a sick bed, while he and his wife were both on my pay roll, several months before he resigned, $15,000 and the promise of $10,000 more, or a total of $25,000, from a Jewish Russian immigrant and one of the leading Communists within the United States, to be used in putting the late Governor Bailey of my State, or anyone else that he could find that would make the race, into the race for the United States [Senate] against me in the campaign of 1946.

He admits that he received this money in September 1945, and held the money until the month of July of this year and drew it out of the bank at Jackson in cash and that he in person delivered it to the Communist leader, Liberman, in New York City or in Washington. Upon investigation it was shown that this Russian Jew died in January 1946, and then when the committee pressed him for a statement of what he really did with the money he refused to answer, and for this he was cited for contempt, but he had already committed perjury when he first said he delivered the money in person to Liberman.

Christ had his Judas Iscariot; Caesar had his Brutus; George Washington had his Benedict Arnold, but I claim to have had the greatest traitor of them all in my trusted secretary, Ed Terry.

Now, gentlemen, I want to thank you sincerely for your very gracious and kind consideration in being patient with me in making this statement, and now I will be glad to try to answer any questions that you may have in mind to submit to me.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
January 2, 1947.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Again, I request your indulgence and ask that you read the attached response to the report of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program.

The committee report in many respects is based on misconceptions or misunderstandings of the full purport of the evidence. My response points out the inaccuracies in the references to the testimony and demonstrates the erroneous conclusions reached in the report on both evidence and applicable law.

Please do not judge me until you have read and carefully considered the report, the response, and the transcript of the evidence (which should soon be in your hands in printed form). Upon the real facts I have confidence that you will reach a righteous decision, when and if you may be called upon to act in any matter affecting my right to continue to represent and serve the people of Mississippi who have three times elected me their United States Senator.

The people of your State want you to represent them, just as my people want me. I am sure you will not permit partisan prejudice or pressure groups to distort your sense of justice, although you may sharply disagree with my ideologies and views on many subjects. You may never have agreed with a word that I have said, but, like Voltaire, I am sure you will defend my right to say every word.

With continued appreciation, I am,
Sincerely yours,

THEO. G. BILBO.

P. S.—Since dictating the attached letter, my attention has been called to a letter purporting to have been signed by the chairman of the special committee. I must call your attention to the second paragraph of this letter which goes further in making charges than the report itself and, certainly, beyond the facts contained in the record of testimony before the subcommittee.

The letter charges:

1. That I solicited political contributions from war contractors and others whom I had aided before Federal departments.

My answer: This is wholly untrue and not supported by evidence.

2. That I accepted personal compensation.

My answer: This is totally untrue. The record shows not one dime of compensation paid to me by any person for services rendered except my salary as a United States Senator. I owe some debts to those who have trusted me but no personal compensation has been received by me.

3. That I accepted gifts.

My answer: The only true statement or charge. These were two Christmas presents—a few pieces of furniture and an automobile.

4. That I accepted services.

My answer: This charge is absolutely untrue and not substantiated by the evidence or any proper conclusions to be drawn from the entire record.

5. That I solicited and accepted substantial amounts of money for a personal charity administered solely by me.

My answer: This is an absurdity and positively untrue. I have collected funds since 1928 for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church as the building and finance committeeman of that religious organization, and have spent every dime I have collected and some of my own personal funds toward and upon this worthy project. As the custodian of the trust funds thus collected I have administered the trust to the entire satisfaction of the church, my pastor, my brethren, and sisters in that church, and the contributors who have assisted.

Please read the evidence on all of the charges before making any decision. I certainly have no objection to submitting the record and testimony in this case to the Department of Justice.

T. G. B.

JANUARY 2, 1947.

RESPONSE TO REPORT CONCERNING ALLEGED TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN SENATOR THEODORE G. BILBO AND VARIOUS WAR CONTRACTORS

INTRODUCTION

This is response on behalf of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO to the report filed by a majority of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program on its investigation of charges made against him.

Despite the fact that the subcommittee heard 44 witnesses, took 564 pages of transcribed testimony and received 126 exhibits in open hearings, yet the majority report in its effort to justify its criticism and in some instances condemnation of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, bases many of its findings and conclusions largely on the disclosures of (1) a politically discredited bitter political enemy of Senator BILBO or (2) of a self-confessed perjurer and contemptuous traitorous former secretary of Senator BILBO.

The record of the testimony reveals a complete explanation of every transaction by Senator BILBO with full corroboration by witnesses whose veracity is wholly unassailed and unimpeached and who appear to be above reproach in every respect as to honesty and integrity.

Every charge that Senator BILBO had received money and had accepted personal property and improvements to real estate from war contractors was first tried before the bar of public opinion in a bitterly contested political primary in Mississippi this past summer. Senator BILBO was acquitted by the people of Mississippi in no uncertain terms by being renominated over four distinguished opponents by a clear majority of 3,834 votes. In the general election he was elected for a third term as United States Senator without opposition.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

True, Senator BILBO was diligent in his efforts to serve his constituents, some of whom were personal or political friends of many years, and to have them receive favorable consideration for contracts in the war effort and defense program but in many cases these contracts here involved were awarded on competitive-bid basis wherein Senator BILBO's influence and interest could have been of little aid or benefit to anyone.

The majority report finds no impropriety in Senator BILBO's efforts to assist any contractor but indeed if there be any impropriety then most Senators and Congressmen would likewise be condemned because all of them were, and should have been, active for their constituents whom they have the high honor to represent in the Congress.

As to political contributions the record discloses without dispute that Senator BILBO received no contributions for his own personal political benefit but that all such contributions were made for the benefit of his then colleague in the United States Senate. In no instance was there any solicitation by Senator BILBO of a single contribution for any political purpose which fact the majority seems to have overlooked wholly in their zeal.

The two gifts and the alleged services found by the majority to have been received by Senator BILBO over the entire period investigated were wholly unrelated to any interest manifested or alleged aid given by Senator BILBO to any so-called war contractor. It was only incidental that for the time being some of those who participated in presenting these small items—old personal and political friends—were so-called war contractors.

There are at least four apparent, outstanding, incomplete or erroneous statements of fact in the majority report. These are:

1. The record conclusively shows that Senator BILBO did not in any instance solicit any contribution from any person or firm connected with the war effort for any political purpose. Great effort was made by rigorous cross-examination of witnesses to obtain an admission of such solicitation. Nevertheless, without any evidence to support it, the conclusion of solicitation is stated in the majority report.

2. There was a payment by Senator BILBO of $1,141.35 for taxes that Morrissey should have paid which was credited on Senator BILBO's debt to Morrissey. This item is wholly overlooked in the majority report.

3. No mention of the fact is made in the majority report that 7 of the 10 donors of the $500 furniture item at Christmas 1941 were not in any sense war contractors and that the three so-called war contractors gave not to exceed a total of $150 on this Christmas gift.

4. The equitable title, as shown by deeds, will, and other transactions, including other statements in evidence in the record here, as well as evidence from the president of the Bank of Commerce, Robert M. Newton, and the representative of the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, H. H. McLeod, to the land on which the Juniper Grove Baptist Church parsonage was built, was in the deacons of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church. Neither Senator BILBO nor either bank could have divested the church authorities of this title and the use of the entire property, including church, cemetery, and parsonage, regardless of in whose name the bare legal title may have been held. This was a fact, as shown by the evidence, that was well known to everyone who could possibly have any interest in the subject, but it, too, is entirely overlooked in the majority report regardless of the undisputed evidence.

Could it not be that other conclusions reached may be likewise on a total misconception of the true facts disclosed by the evidence in the hearing?

So far as the evidence discloses the work done on the artificial lake and island, the swimming pool, and the painting of the house for Senator BILBO, were actual bona fide business transactions, contracted in the ordinary course of business. There was no subterfuge to conceal these transactions. They appeared at large on the records of the contracting parties, statements of indebtedness were presented and requests for payments were sent to Senator BILBO by those to whom he owed the indebtedness.

The so-called loss in the operation of the farm by Michael T. Morrissey, whose contracts were all awarded on competitive-bid basis, was something over which Senator BILBO had absolutely no control. Morrissey had his own farm managers, employed his own labor, made his own expenditures, kept all of the records and the losses were set up on his books which were subject to, and inspected by, agents of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The donation of $30,000 from F. T. Newton, B. L. Knost, and Michael T. Morrissey to the 1942 political campaign of Wall Doxey for the United States Senate in the Mississippi Democratic primary were in no sense solicited as political contributions from Government contractors by Senator BILBO. In both instances the checks were payable to Senator BILBO; he endorsed the checks and turned them over to Robert Gandy to cash them and through him and others acting with him, the expenditures were made.

With reference to the $5,000 donated by Knost and Morrissey, Senator BILBO did not handle a single penny of the money. The cashing of the check for $5,000 and the entire expenditure were made by Robert Gandy and the items of the expenditure were supported by an account which was received in evidence by the subcommittee.

As to the $25,000 item, the four checks totaling the amount were made payable to Senator BILBO, were endorsed by him and turned over to Robert Gandy, who obtained the cash therefor and delivered the cash to the so-called informal committee of which Senator BILBO was acting as a member. The expenditure of this $25,000 was fully and completely explained and accounted for by Senator BILBO, Robert Gandy, Forrest Jackson, A. B. Friend, Roland Wall, and Cecil Travis. In fact, this committee expended more than the $25,000 and at the conclusion of the campaign three of the members of the committee, not including Senator BILBO, were indebted for money obtained from the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., of Jackson, Miss., in the sum of $5,000, which has been repaid by them down to a balance of $1,000 at the date of the hearings.

True, donations and solicitations of political contributions from Government contractors while they are negotiating or performing such contracts is prohibited by title 18, section 61–M–1, United States Code, but as heretofore pointed out there is not one scintilla of evidence in this record that Senator BILBO violated this law by soliciting a penny by way of political contributions from any Government contractor.

In receiving the checks from so-called war contractors Senator BILBO had the right to presume that the gentlemen making the contributions were not law violators and, indeed, he is justified in that presumption since, although 4 years have passed since such contributions were made and the facts with reference thereto have been notorious throughout Mississippi, yet the Department of Justice and no Federal agency or other authority has made any attempt to prosecute any alleged violations of this statute by either or any of the parties in question.

Reference is made in the majority report that F. T. Newton attempted to charge the amount of the contribution as expenses on his books of account. May we point out that Senator BILBO could in no sense be charged with the bookkeeping accounts of Mr. Newton or anyone else and indeed the auditors of Mr. Newton without any suggestion from the Internal Revenue Department changed the entries to show the true facts.

Senator BILBO is also criticized by the majority report for collecting from many persons contributions for the building of Juniper Grove Baptist Church and the parsonage. It is asserted that at least $7,300 of the total collected was from war contractors who had been aided by Senator BILBO. Let us point out that contributions for religious and charitable purposes are recognized as a wholesome public policy because in every internal revenue act that the Congress has enacted provision has been made in recognition of the right of every person to make such contributions and to have the same deducted in their income-tax returns. Reference is made to the fact that the so-called war contractors contributing to this worthy project were not residents of Poplarville, Miss., nor members of that church. The record discloses that of the total amount collected and expended by Senator BILBO since 1928 when this project first began only a small amount has been contributed by residents of the community or members of the church. It is a church in a poor rural community.

For at least 18 years no question was raised as to the propriety of Senator BILBO receiving contributions as a member of the building and finance committee of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church for the building of the church and parsonage. Everyone has recognized the propriety of his action and hundreds of people from all over Mississippi and in some instances outside of the State have contributed so that this community might have an outstanding country church project. We can see no impropriety in that which Senator BILBO did in connection with the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage. Indeed the majority finds that there was no personal gain to Senator BILBO from the Juniper Grove Baptist Church parsonage donations but that all of the donations went to this project.

We conclude, therefore, that the true evidence presented to the committee clearly indicates that Senator BILBO was guilty of no impropriety as a United States Senator and that he did not in any instance use his high office for his personal gain in his dealings with war contractors or any other persons.

We shall discuss the evidence produced in the committee's public hearings under the same four separate categories used in the majority report:

1. Sums of money received by Senator Bilbo from war contractors used in the 1942 Mississippi senatorial campaign

Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, died on June 22, 1941. His term of office expired in January 1943. Senator JAMES O. EASTLAND was given the interim appointment by the Governor of Mississippi and thereafter a special election was called for the purpose of electing someone to fill the unexpired term of Senator Harrison. In this campaign Wall Doxey, then Congressman from the Second Mississippi Congressional District, was a candidate and he was opposed by Ross A. Collins, Congressman from the Fifth Mississippi Congressional District. Collins, who claims to have initiated this investigation, was defeated in that election and Wall Doxey became the junior United States Senator from Mississippi. Senator BILBO was politically friendly to Senator Doxey in that campaign and the friends of Senator Doxey in Mississippi continued a political organization since it was apparent that Senator Doxey would offer for reelection for the full term.

In 1942 Senator Doxey was again opposed by Ross A. Collins and also by Senator JAMES O. EASTLAND, Roland Wall, and Douglas Smith. In the first primary held on August 25, 1942, Senator Doxey and Senator EASTLAND were the high candidates of the five and were in the second or run-off Democratic primary held on September 15, 1942.

Robert Gandy with others in Mississippi was attempting to finance the preprimary efforts on behalf of Senator Doxey for reelection. On June 12, 1942, B. L. Knost and Michael T. Morrissey were at dinner in the home of Mr. Knost with Senator BILBO. The testimony shows without dispute that Knost and Morrissey inquired of Senator BILBO as to the progress being made with the campaign of Senator Doxey for reelection; that Senator BILBO advised them that funds according to his information were coming in rather slowly. Thereupon Knost and Morrissey voluntarily offered to contribute without solicitation from Senator BILBO $2,500 each to the campaign funds of Senator Doxey. The check was made by B. L. Knost on his personal account, not out of war-contract funds, payable to Senator BILBO. Senator BILBO endorsed the check and delivered it to Robert Gandy. Robert Gandy in turn cashed the check at the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., in Jackson, Miss., and Robert Gandy thereupon disbursed for expenses in connection with the precampaign expenditures for Senator Doxey the total of $5,000. Senator BILBO did not receive one penny of the proceeds of this check for $5,000. He did not pay out any of the money so received. All of it was expended by Robert Gandy who gave a complete accounting therefor to the subcommittee.

At the time, B. L. Knost drew this check on his personal account, he was associated in a joint venture with J. A. Jones Construction Co. and Newton & Glenn on the Keesler Field project at Biloxi, Miss. Michael T. Morrissey had been the successful bidder for renting dirt-moving equipment, of which he was the owner, to the Corps of Engineers, at Mobile, Ala., and the contractors on the Keesler Field project.

There is nothing in the record to justify the conclusion that this money was solicited by Senator BILBO within the meaning, purport, or intent of section 61–M–1 of title 18, United States Code. To the contrary Mr. Knost and Senator BILBO both swore positively that there was no solicitation by Senator BILBO but that the contribution was voluntarily made on the part of Knost and Morrissey from their personal funds because of their friendship for and great interest in the success of Senator Doxey.

On or about September 3, 1942, A. B. Friend, who was devoting a large portion of his time in connection with other friends of Senator Doxey in the primary campaign, talked with Senator BILBO, who was then in Washington. In the course of the conversation it was suggested that there be a political rally of outstanding citizens of Mississippi interested in Senator Doxey's election, which rally was held on September 7, 1942. A. B. Friend sent out letters to approximately 500 citizens of Mississippi requesting their attendance at this rally to be held on September 7. One of these 500 letters was sent to F. T. Newton and a copy of the letter is set forth as appendix 2 in the majority report. The purpose of the rally was to stimulate interest in and incidentally to collect funds necessary for the expenses of Wall Doxey's campaign. At this meeting on September 7 several speeches were made to the approximately 300 people there gathered. These 300 people came from practically every county in Mississippi, and there are 82 counties in the State. After this meeting on September 7, 1942, a number of contributions were made to the regular Wall Doxey campaign organization situated about three blocks west of the Royal Hotel, Jackson. There were also some contributions made to the informal group that had headquarters in the Royal Hotel. Among these contributions were four checks totaling $25,000 drawn by F. T. Newton on the firm account of Newton & Glenn who happened to be members of the coadventure engaged in the construction of Keesler Field at Biloxi. The checks were not drawn on the coadventure account or accounts but were drawn on and from the personal funds of the copartnership composed of Newton & Glenn. The testimony is without dispute that there was no solicitation by Senator BILBO from F. T. Newton of this contribution and there was nothing on the checks or in the entire transaction to indicate that the funds were coming from a war contractor as such.

These four checks were endorsed by Senator BILBO and delivered to Robert Gandy, who likewise endorsed them, and Gandy received the cash therefor from the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. and delivered the cash back to Forrest Jackson, Robert Gandy, A. B. Friend, and Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, who were acting as individuals in an informal committee interested in the success of Wall Doxey's campaign for nomination in the Democratic primary.

All of the members of this informal committee testified positively and without contradiction that the $25,000 and other contributions were received and were disbursed by them in the interest of Senator Doxey's campaign with the final results that Gandy, Jackson, and Friend were personally indebted to the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., of Jackson, in the sum of $5,000 besides other accounts that made up a deficit of their activities, in the interest of Senator Doxey's campaign. Their testimony is corroborated by Cecil Travis and by Roland Wall. Travis acknowledged that he received $11,000 of money from the informal group and Roland Wall acknowledged that he received slightly in excess of $8,000 from the same group; $7,500 of the contributions received on September 7 were used to repay a loan that Forrest Jackson and Robert Gandy had obtained from the First National Bank of Hattiesburg for use in the Wall Doxey campaign and $2,500 of the common fund were used to repay a note at the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., the proceeds of which had likewise been expended in the Wall Doxey campaign.

No account of the receipts and disbursements by the group at the Royal Hotel interested in the election of Senator Doxey was kept nor was there any report filed with any officer of the State of Mississippi, there being no law requiring the keeping of any such records or the making of any such reports in a primary election in Mississippi. However, Robert Gandy did maintain and presented for the consideration of this committee a personal record of the amounts which he personally received and expended. Mr. Gandy did not personally expend the $25,000 received from F. T. Newton. This amount with other contributions received on September 7 went into a common fund and from this common fund some amounts were delivered to Mr. Gandy which he entered as receiving and from these receipts he showed his disbursements and his account, exhibited in evidence, shows that he personally concluded with a deficit.

While it is true that there was a notation by Mr. Gandy in his personal account that the $5,000 Knost check was a loan, he explained in detail that this notation had no significance and that he did not pay the $5,000 back either to Senator BILBO or to Mr. Knost. Gandy considered the $5,000 by his actions as a contribution. Senator BILBO and Mr. Knost both testified that this $5,000 was a contribution to Wall Doxey's campaign.

The only possible criticism of Senator BILBO is that he permitted these checks for political campaign contributions, both the $25,000 and the $5,000 to be made payable to him, and yet the fact in and of itself demonstrates that there was no effort at concealment or subterfuge and further indicates to the right-thinking person that there was no idea of wrongdoing in connection with these contributions. If Senator BILBO had wanted to hide, cover up, or prevent anyone from knowing all about these contributions, he could have easily arranged it otherwise than to have the checks payable to him.

Senator Doxey had a regular official campaign manager, Mr. Lee D. Hall, of Columbia, Miss. Mr. Hall filed an accounting of receipts and disbursements, and there was offered in evidence by Mr. Hall a detailed statement of receipts and disbursements. Senator Doxey had no knowledge of many of the items collected in his behalf and did not know that F. T. Newton had contributed the $25,000 toward his campaign until after the campaign was over. He first learned of it from Edward P. Terry, former secretary to Senator BILBO. He next learned of it from Senator BILBO. He had the knowledge confirmed by F. T. Newton on October 9, 1942. The total expenditures were explained to him by Robert Gandy shortly after October 9, 1942.

The record therefore discloses that all of the funds collected for the Doxey campaign were expended in the interest of that campaign and in addition there was a deficit since the expenditures exceeded the total contributions. The testimony shows that on the night before the primary of September 15, 1942, Senator BILBO called Forrest Jackson who was then at the Markham Hotel in Gulfport, Miss., and advised Jackson that there was only $2,000 left in the common fund and there were the outstanding $5,000 note at the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. and other items of expense that would necessarily have to be paid. Senator BILBO asked Jackson what should be done under the circumstances and Jackson requested Senator BILBO to use the $2,000 for the legitimate campaign expenses, using the expression "shoot the works," which Senator BILBO did and thereby all of the common fund of the informal group was expended and the deficit occurred.

With reference to "operating deficits" in political campaigns in Mississippi, the record discloses that there is nothing unusual about these deficits occurring and indeed we may assume that it is common knowledge that many political campaigns wind up with substantial deficits. There is no indication of impropriety in paying off such deficits, indeed common honesty requires the payment of honest indebtedness regardless of how it may arise. The settlement of "operating deficits" of defeated candidates has been practiced in Mississippi politics according to this record for many years without criticism by anyone. We therefore conclude that there was nothing improper in the payment to Roland Wall and to Cecil Travis of the amounts they acknowledged to have received.

While there was little documentary evidence from which it can be ascertained precisely the names of contributors, the amounts received, or the amounts expended yet there is positive evidence as hereinabove delineated demonstrating that all of the money received by the so-called informal committee was expended in the interest of the Wall Doxey campaign. The gentlemen who received and disbursed the funds stated positively that all of the money received was disbursed for the campaign and that $5,000 and some current accounts in addition thereto remained over and above to be paid after all of the contributions had been expended. This evidence is undisputed and these witnesses are unimpeached and their honesty and integrity have not been questioned by any witnesses or other evidence in this record. We therefore conclude that it has been shown with certainty that all of the funds received from war contractors and others were in fact completely expended for the Wall Doxey campaign and that no individual wrongfully profited one penny from such contributions.

Under the facts disclosed by this record we cannot see any pertinency of the Federal statute, passed July 19, 1940, title 18, section 61–M–1, of the United States Code, to any disclosure of the action of Senator BILBO in the political campaign for the election of Senator Doxey in 1942. Senator BILBO did not admit but, to the contrary, denied that he solicited $5,000 from B. L. Knost or $25,000 from F. T. Newton or any other amount from any so-called war contractor. (See testimony of B. L. Knost, Monday, December 16, 1946.) Here is the record:

"Senator FERGUSON. Can't you give more of what took place there when you gave $2,500 and Morrissey $2,500 and you gave the check?

"Mr. KNOST. Can't I give you more of what, sir?

"Senator FERGUSON. More of the details of what took place. Didn't Senator BILBO ask you for a donation for the campaign?

"Mr. KNOST. No, sir.

"Senator FERGUSON. Didn't he ask Morrissey?

"Mr. KNOST. No, sir."

(See testimony of F. T. Newton.)

Here is the record:

"Mr. MEADER. Mr. Newton, why did you make these checks out to Senator BILBO?

"Mr. NEWTON. Because I wanted them properly spent.

"Mr. MEADER. And he also was the one who asked you for the money, wasn't he?

"Mr. NEWTON. No, sir.

"Mr. MEADER. Who did ask you for the money?

"Mr. NEWTON. There didn't anybody ask me direct.

"Mr. MEADER. How did he ask you?

"Mr. NEWTON. They had this meeting there, this political meeting.

"Mr. MEADER. You said before that had nothing to do with your giving the money.

"Mr. NEWTON. They said they needed money.

"Mr. MEADER. But you said that wasn't the reason you gave it.

"Mr. NEWTON. It wasn't. My reason for giving it was a personal reason, and the personal reason was because I had lost a job up here that we had already been told we had.

"Mr. MEADER. And nobody asked you about giving a donation or urged you to give a donation before you made it?

"Mr. NEWTON. No, sir. I wasn't singled out; I wasn't asked for one dime personally."

2. Gratuities or benefits received by Senator Bilbo from war contractors

Our analysis of the majority report and of its discussion of alleged gratuities and benefits will follow the order used in that report.

Senator BILBO received a Cadillac car as a Christmas gift, which from the undisputed evidence is a custom which has prevailed in Mississippi and perhaps elsewhere for many years in that many high public officials have been given automobiles and other valuable gifts by their admirers and friends. It appears that the gentleman who presented this Christmas gift is a man of considerable wealth, engaged in many diverse activities; that he has been a personal and political friend of Senator BILBO for more than 20 years; that before this gift was presented, Morrissey, the donor, asked Ed P. Terry, then secretary to Senator BILBO, as to the propriety of the gift and was advised by Terry that it was entirely proper. There was no secret about the gift. It was well known throughout Mississippi and the people had this matter presented to them in Senator BILBO's recent campaign for reelection, and by their overwhelming vote determined that there was no impropriety in his accepting the Cadillac car.

With reference to the furniture for Dream House No. 2, consisting of a sofa, three chairs, three floor lamps, and two table lamps, of the total value of $500, they were purchased by Edward P. Terry, then secretary to Senator BILBO, and Robert Gandy, another old-time friend, and were presented as a Christmas gift with a card containing 10 names of supposed friends, including three so-called war contractors. Terry and Gandy bought the furniture from R. E. Kennington Co. at Jackson, Miss., went to the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. at Jackson, borrowed $500 on their joint note and paid cash from the proceeds of the loan for the furniture. Terry attached the card containing the names of the 10 purported donors. Subsequently Terry collected various amounts from individuals throughout Mississippi, representing that the donations were to be used for the repayment of the amount expended for the furniture. The note remained unpaid until Terry requested M. T. Reed to pay the note for him at the Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. Reed complied with Terry's request.

The remaining items in the majority report are items of indebtedness with the exception of the $48,023.98, operating losses while Michael T. Morrissey was operating the Bilbo farm consisting of approximately 3,300 acres, with all improvements, farm machinery, livestock, and equipment.

In January 1943 Senator BILBO rearranged his existing loan with the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, which was not a new loan or increase of pending loan, but was solely to change the terms of the loan. At this time he signed a financial statement prepared by the local secretary of the farm-loan association. The association secretary at the time advised Senator BILBO that it was only necessary to show the items of indebtedness which the secretary of the association had written on the blank financal statement. Therefore this purported financial statement did not include the total indebtedness of Senator BILBO.

Morrissey used some equipment which he owned and which had, up to that time, not been engaged in any war contract to build a dam for a 15-acre lake, surrounding an island on which Dream House No. 2 was built by Senator BILBO. Morrissey had agreed with Senator BILBO on Morrissey's own offer and proposition to do this work for actual cost of labor and fuel necessary to operate his equipment. In turn, Senator BILBO permitted Morrissey to occupy the residence of Senator BILBO during the few weeks necessary to perform the work. After the work was completed Morrissey submitted a bill or statement showing an indebtedness from Senator BILBO to him of $3,672.91. On this account Senator BILBO is entitled to a credit of $1,141.35, the amount of taxes paid by Senator BILBO in August 1945, which taxes Morrissey was under contract to pay, as will be discussed under the farm-rental agreement later in this statement. While Morrissey testified that he was of opinion that he had moved from 150,000 to 165,000 cubic yards of earth, A. B. Friend, the engineer, who had actually surveyed the lake site, including the earthen dam, stated that Morrissey's estimate was excessive. Col. John L. Person, of the Corps of United States Army engineers, looked at a picture taken some years after the project was completed and after the lake had partially filled with water and from such observation of a photograph he estimated the value of the excavation work would have run from $34,500 to $37,950. Colonel Person admitted, however, that for a proper estimate to have been made it would be necessary for him to have surveyed the site in question and to have made cross sections of the earth actually removed. Regardless of any estimate the actual cost to Senator BILBO was $3,672.91, and he has made payment on this indebtedness of $1,141.35 by the credit above-mentioned, and Senator BILBO states that he still considers it a debt and will pay Morrissey in full when funds are available.

Senator BILBO about April 1942 was engaged in attempting to build a swimming pool on hi property near Poplarville. Mr. John R. Junkin, president of the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., a business that has been in successful operation for approximately 50 years, all of the capital stock of which is owned by John R. Junkin and his brother William Junkin, used a mixing machine with sand and gravel and most of the cement furnished by Senator BILBO in mixing concrete to be poured into forms which Senator BILBO had personally constructed. Mr. Junkin and his brother have for many years been close personal and political friends of Senator BILBO. Mr. Junkin testified without dispute that he instructed his bookkeeper to enter the item of $1,194.70, the actual cost of the work done by employees of St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., on the swimming pool in the books of the corporation as a charge to the personal accounts of John R. Junkin and William Junkin and that a bill be sent to Senator BILBO for the amount. A bill was sent marked "paid in full" by the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc. Some time later Mr. Junkin discovered the error, called the matter to the attention of the income tax agents of the Internal Revenue Bureau; the entries were corrected and Mr. Junkin and his brother paid the corporation income taxes on the item as income. Mr. Junkin stated and Senator BILBO corroborated the statement that the indebtedness of $1,194.70 was still due by Senator BILBO to John R. Junkin and William Junkin individually but that neither had made any effort to collect it, depending upon the belief that Senator BILBO would ultimately pay the account.

At the time this work was performed the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., had a contract which they had obtained on a competitive bid from the War Department and the contractors constructing Keesler Field to furnish mixed concrete at a fixed price per cubic yard. The record shows that Senator BILBO had absolutely nothing to do with the obtaining of this contract for the St. Catherine Gravel Co., Inc., but that the contract was obtained upon the basis of the best bid offered for the concrete to be furnished.

M. T. Reed, copartner of M. T. Reed Construction Co., offered to paint Dream House No. 1 for Senator BILBO at a price of cost of labor and materials plus 10-percent overhead plus 10-percent profit. This offer was accepted by Senator BILBO, the contract was thereupon entered into, and the work was performed. A statement of the account was sent to Senator BILBO, which was acknowledged by him. Since that time Senator BILBO has delivered to Mr. Reed 400 pounds of paper-shell pecans for which $200 has been credited against the paint bill. Both Mr. Reed and Senator BILBO stated that the balance of this account is still owing and that it will be paid. True, Mr. Reed attempted to show this as a bad debt for income-tax purposes in 1941 but his effort was disallowed and it stands as an accounts receivable on the records of Mr. Reed.

With reference to the statute of limitations in Mississippi on open accounts it is our understanding that to claim this statute is a matter of personal privilege to a debtor. Senator BILBO stated positively that he had never in his lifetime pleaded and would not plead any statute of limitations on an honest debt nor had he ever taken advantage of the National Bankruptcy Act. In addition it might be stated that Senator BILBO has acknowledged in writing the receipt of the statements and the indebtedness represented by such statements in most of these cases, in which event the statute of limitations in Mississippi is 6 years and therefore none of such debts are yet barred by any statute.

The matter of the gift of the new Cadillac sedan as a Christmas present at Christmas 1941 has already been discussed in this report. This is likewise true with reference to the $500 of household furnishings delivered to Dream House No. 2. It might be pointed out, however, that there is no indebtedness in connection with this transaction from Senator BILBO to M. T. Reed. The indebtedness would be from Edward P. Terry and Robert Gandy, the comakers of the note, to M. T. Reed. Senator BILBO received the furniture as a Christmas gift. There could be no indebtedness of Senator BILBO in this type of transaction.

For the 4-year period, 1942 through 1945, Morrissey and Senator BILBO had an agreement under which Senator BILBO let all of his farm properties, consisting of approximately 3,300 acres in Pearl River County, Miss., to Morrissey. The agreement was that Morrissey was to pay all operating expenses and ad valorem taxes assessed against the property. Senator BILBO delivered to Morrissey one truck, six farm wagons, two tractors, livestock, poultry, farming tools and equipment—in fact everything going with a farm operation. In addition there was a large pecan grove, a pear orchard and tungnut grove. It was agreed that whatever profit there should be in the transaction this would be divided equally between Senator BILBO and Morrissey but Morrissey was to absorb any loss. The record discloses a total loss, as shown by Morrissey's income-tax returns of $48,023.48 for income-tax purposes. Morrissey further testified that there was nothing unusual about the loss and gave as illustration that on another farm operation which he had at the same time he lost $65,000 in 1 year, paying after such losses in excess of $150,000 in income taxes from all of his varied operations and investments.

Senator BILBO testified that there was no benefit to him arising from this farm operation except Morrissey paid 3 years' taxes and was supposed to have paid the fourth year but Senator BILBO discovered that his property was about to be sold for taxes in August 1946 because Morrissey had overlooked the paying of the taxes. Senator BILBO paid $1,141.35 ad valorem taxes and credited this amount against the indebtedness to Morrissey for the lake and island construction job, which was agreeable to Morrissey. To illustrate his testimony of no benefits to him or his property, Senator BILBO stated without dispute that Morrissey returned the property to him, including livestock and equipment, in a much worse condition, consequently reduced in amount and greatly depleted in value, than it was when delivered to Morrissey. No permanent improvements were made by Morrissey during the 4 years except some terracing of pasture and farm lands under the AAA program of the Federal Government which could have been done regardless of whether Morrissey had been in charge of the property or not. Morrissey was paid by the AAA authorities for the terracing work and this item was reported as a part of the receipts from the operation of the farm. There is nothing unusual about this method of operation. The entire tenant and sharecropper system works largely on the same basis in the South.

There is no evidence that justifies any conclusion that the statements of Senator BILBO with reference to these various items of debt, corroborated by the others involved, were not in accord with the exact claim of Senator BILBO. The evidence does not justify any conclusion that the evidence given by Senator BILBO and the corroborating testimony is a mere "subterfuge manufactured for the occasion of this committee hearing."

Again we point out that all of these various items were fully discussed in a hotly contested political campaign in which Senator BILBO was opposed by four distinguished Mississippians and the people of Mississippi, after hearing all the charges put in their worst light, together with any and all implications that might be drawn therefrom, returned Senator BILBO for a third term in the United States Senate by a clear majority of 3,834 over these 4 opponents in the first primary.

We submit that there is no evidence to justify the conclusion that Senator BILBO has been guilty of any illegal practice in any instance in violation of existing Federal statutes.

3. Funds paid to Senator Bilbo for the construction of Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage

Senator BILBO is a member in good standing of Juniper Grove Baptist Church. This church was established by Senator BILBO's father and others in that community in 1856. The first two acres of land were donated by Senator BILBO's father to the church and thereafter there have been constructed on this and adjoining lands four houses of worship, including the present structure. The church is just in front and across the road from Senator BILBO's home. The church plant or project consists of a brick two-story, basement and balcony, colonial type structure, with 19 Sunday school rooms and two auditoriums. To the south of the church building is the cemetery or burial ground, the land for which was likewise donated by Senator BILBO's father. To the original gifts of land Senator BILBO has personally given two additional acres several years ago. And adjoining this land to the south and just north of a public highway there is approximately two acres on which the church parsonage has been constructed but has not yet been fully completed. The parsonage portion of the property includes a dwelling house, a barn, a servant's house, a laundry, a two-way garage, and a chicken house. The entire property is surrounded by a colonial fence constructed of cypress.

The record discloses without dispute that Senator BILBO is a duly elected member of the building and finance committee of this church, his election appearing on the minutes of the church congregation and exhibited in evidence. In 1944 when Senator BILBO was quite ill and it became necessary for him to go to Mayo's Clinic at Rochester for a serious operation, he delivered a deed to the chancery clerk or recorder of deeds of Pearl River County, Miss., in which the parsonage acreage is located, deeding to the deacons of the church full and complete title to the property on which the parsonage is situated, with the understanding that if he should die this deed should be delivered to the deacons and at the same time he executed his last will and testament and set up a commission with instructions and powers to sell his additional property to pay off any indebtedness on the parsonage and enlarged cemetery lands which would free it from any record or legal encumbrances that were at the time held by the Bank of Commerce and the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans. Subsequently, Senator BILBO delivered corrective deed to the said chancery clerk in which the legal description of the lands in question were more completely stated.

Since 1928 when Senator BILBO was then Governor of Mississippi, in his second term as such, he has been engaged in collecting funds for the building of this church, cemetery, and parsonage project and has at all times stated to the world at large by letter and otherwise that the funds were being expended for a religious purpose in the construction of a country church plant to administer to the religious needs of a very poor inland community. It is apparent from this record that of all the funds collected for this worthy project only a very small amount has been contributed by the membership of the church or by residents of the immediate community. The plant is now practically completed and the parsonage will be occupied by the pastor of the church in a few days and there will be a complete dedication, which involves the certification that all debts are paid, on April 27, 1947, the date having already been fixed.

The mortgages heretofore on the lands in question have all been released. The Bank of Commerce and the Federal land bank and all the people of Mississippi have been advised of the condition of the title and all have recognized that the funds collected were trust funds; that the equitable title to the property was vested by reason of the fiduciary relationship existing under the laws of Mississippi in the church authorities regardless of where the bare legal title may be.

We can find no material difference between this type of philanthropic enterprise and other outstanding ones, in which we might mention the Warm Springs Foundation, including the March of Dimes.

We conclude therefore that on this record there was no impropriety for Senator BILBO to request contributions to the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage, administered by him under the law of Mississippi and under the rules and practices of the Baptist faith. Senator BILBO has done no more than thousands of other religious, educational, charitable, and political organizations and individuals have done in soliciting funds from the general public. The pastors, the deacons, and the membership of the Juniper Grove Baptist Church, and all contributors have at all times been happy and completely satisfied in the way in which Senator BILBO has handled these funds since 1928 in the building of this memorial church project and instead of censuring he should be commended.

4. Other matters not directly related to war contracts

A. The Shushan Note

The record disclosed that on or about July 21, 1938, Senator BILBO received from Grant Stewart, a merchant of New Hebron, Miss., the sum of $3,000 to be used by Senator BILBO as a part of a cash alimony settlement of $21,750, which was a property settlement by Senator BILBO with his ex-wife. Some days prior thereto Senator BILBO had requested Mr. Stewart to lend him the money. Mr. Stewart stated he did not have the funds personally but would obtain them and bring them to Senator BILBO's home at noon on the day before the divorce matter was to be concluded. Accordingly Mr. Stewart brought the money. Some time later Mr. Stewart advised Senator BILBO that he had borrowed the money from Abraham L. Shushan, a dry-goods merchant of Jackson, Miss., and New Orleans, La., and that Mr. Shushan wanted a note for the amount of $3,000. Senator BILBO and Grant Stewart gave their note to Abraham L. Shushan, dated July 21, 1938, for the sum of $3,000. Mr. Shushan insisted in his testimony that he made the loan entirely on the credit of and to Grant Stewart—not knowing Senator BILBO, but knowing Grant Stewart.

In 1940 Shushan began efforts to collect the note in question from Grant Stewart and was continually pressing Stewart for payment as shown by the letters exhibited in evidence by Mr. Shushan. In 1939 Senator BILBO had contacted the Chief Counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in an effort to assist in having the Bureau settle a civil suit on an income-tax liability of Mr. Shushan. The Bureau eventually collected most of the claimed liability.

In 1940, at the time Shushan was attempting to collect the note from Grant Stewart, Edward P. Terry contacted Robert M. Newton, Forrest Jackson, and Grant Stewart advising that Shushan was going to give some publicity to the note transaction that might prove embarrassing to Senator BILBO in his senatorial campaign and in his efforts as a speaker for the National Democratic Committee in certain doubtful States. The note was paid by Grant Stewart to Abraham L. Shushan.

In July or August 1940, the record being in dispute on the exact date, Robert Newton, president of the Bank of Commerce, of Poplarville, Miss.; Edward P. Terry, then secretary to Senator BILBO; Grant Stewart, one of the original comakers of the note; and Forrest Jackson, attorney of Jackson, Miss., Stewart, Newton, and Jackson having been for many years close personal and political friends of Senator BILBO, each paid $750 to Grant Stewart for the purpose of paying the Shushan indebtedness. Subsequently Senator BILBO paid Grant Stewart $750 and Forrest Jackson paid Edward P. Terry the amount he had advanced by giving a check for $500 to Terry and a check of $250 to Grant Stewart, it appearing that there was some arrangement between Stewart and Terry with reference to the $250 amount. Forrest Jackson was not a war contractor. Robert Newton was not a war contractor. Grant Stewart was not a war contractor. Terry was at that time Senator BILBO's secretary. Forrest Jackson in 1942, by arrangement with the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., through its general agents, Robinson & Julienee, of Jackson, Miss., brokered the insurance binder on the Key Field contract, for which he and his law firm received approximately $900, of which amount Jackson received $445 gross. Jackson's law firm was attorney for the Volx Construction Co., Rock City Construction Co., A. B. Friend, and Flynt-Jordan Construction Co. during the time that these associated contractors were engaged in the construction of Key Field at Meridian, Miss., in 1942. Neither Robert Newton or Forrest Jackson have made any efforts to collect from Senator BILBO the money paid on his note to Grant Stewart, who in turn paid Abraham L. Shushan. Senator BILBO testified, however, that he still owed these gentlemen for the amount they had paid to Grant Stewart and Edward P. Terry. There is nothing in this transaction for which there can be either criticism or condemnation, and it has absolutely no connection with the war effort.

B. The Narcotics Charge

As stated by the majority report, this matter is wholly aside from any connection with war contracts. It was a matter, however, that was developed in an investigation conducted by agents of the Internal Revenue Bureau in April 1946, which records were made available to this committee and again in October 1946, Investigator Lane, of the committee, made an investigation for the committee of the matters involved. Both of these investigations were upon information furnished by Edward P. Terry, ex-secretary of Senator BILBO.

In the course of the hearings when Terry was being interrogated with reference to the sum of $15,000 in cash which he had deposited in the Jackson State National Bank at Jackson, Miss., on September 8, 1945, and which he had withdrawn in cash from that institution in July 1946, and after the reelection of Senator BILBO for the third term, Terry stated that at the time he made the $15,000 deposit, and in order to fix the time in his own mind he recalled that he had had a conversation with Dr. A. J. Podesta, of Vicksburg, Miss., and that Dr. Podesta told him that he, Podesta, had given Senator BILBO $1,500 which John Carr, of Natchez, had given to Dr. Podesta for Senator BILBO in appreciation for services rendered by Senator BILBO in connection with the Narcotics Bureau. The service was that Carr, a drug addict of 35 or 40 years, was in need of the maximum amount of morphine that could be given by a reputable physician's prescription. It was at this time that Terry stated that he had received the $15,000 from Simon Liberman, of New York, for the purpose of getting some candidate to oppose Senator BILBO in his race for reelection, Terry and his wife at the time being employed in Senator BILBO's office. On being questioned as to what had become of the $15,000 after Terry had stated that he was unable to obtain a candidate in opposition to Senator BILBO that he thought could defeat Senator BILBO he stated he had paid the money back to Mr. Liberman after the July 1946 withdrawal from the bank at Jackson. When faced with the proposition that Simon Liberman had died on January 5, 1946, and that he was therefore guilty of perjury, Terry refused to further answer questions of the committee, and the committee gave instructions that Terry be cited for contempt of the Senate. Therefore, the entire basis for the charge and the intimation comes from a confessed perjurer and one who is presently under charge of contempt of the Senate, and we do not believe his testimony is worthy of any credence.

The facts developed from the investigation by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, by the investigation of Mr. Lane for the committee, by the affidavits of John Carr, Dr. J. G. Logan, and Dr. A. J. Podesta, including Senator BILBO, are briefly as follows:

Carr, a drug addict, through Dr. J. G. Logan, of Natchez, Miss., and Dr. A. J. Podesta, of Vicksburg, Miss., desired to obtain the maximum morphine permitted to be administered under the rules and regulations of the Bureau of Narcotics. Drs. Podesta and Logan gave appropriate certificates certifying to Mr. Carr's need for the drug. Senator BILBO presented these affidavits to Mr. Harry J. Anslinger, Commissioner of Narcotics in Washington. Mr. Anslinger testified that there was nothing unusual or out of the ordinary about this practice; that he went to Senator BILBO's office, saw the affidavits of Drs. Logan and Podesta, and on October 11, 1945, wrote to Dr. Logan advising Dr. Logan that there was no objection to prescribing up to 2 grains of morphine daily for Mr. Carr; that an independent investigation was made that fully justified the affidavits of Drs. Logan and Podesta and that Carr was entitled to have prescribed the amount of narcotic indicated. Some time later Mr. Anslinger heard from an investigator of the Bureau of Internal Revenue that Senator BILBO had been paid $1,500 for the services rendered to Mr. Carr. The committee then sent another investigator, Mr. Mannix, to obtain statements in affidavit form from Dr. A. J. Podesta, Dr. J. G. Logan, and John A. Carr. Dr. Logan's affidavit was that he knew nothing about any financial transaction between Mr. Carr, Dr. Podesta, or Senator BILBO. John A. Carr gave his affidavit that some weeks after he had been told by Dr. Logan that he had permission to prescribe the narcotic for Carr from the Bureau of Narcotics, that he, Carr, went to Vicksburg to see Dr. Podesta and told Dr. Podesta of the fact that the Bureau of Narcotics had given him the relief he desired. Mr. Carr then said to Dr. Podesta that he wanted to do something for Senator BILBO. There was some discussion with reference to the making of a donation to the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage fund in which Senator BILBO's interest was well known. Carr thereupon took from his pocketpurse ten $100 bills, or $1,000, and delivered it to Dr. Podesta to be given to Senator BILBO for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage fund as a token of his appreciation for the services that had been rendered by Senator BILBO to him. Carr stated that he was a man of considerable business activity in past years and that it was untrue as had been stated that he had given Dr. Podesta his life's savings.

Dr. Podesta's statement to the investigator is to the effect that some time after Mr. Anslinger had written to Dr. Logan, Mr. Carr came to his office and the conversation given by Carr was corroborated by him. That he took the thousand dollars, put it in an envelope, placed it in his safe in his office; that some time later he learned that Senator BILBO was in Jackson; that he went over late one afternoon and found Senator BILBO at the Royal Hotel where Senator BILBO always stopped when in Jackson; that he went up to Senator BILBO's room and there found a number of people, all strangers to Dr. Podesta, in the room with Senator BILBO and that his recollection was that Senator BILBO was shaving. Dr. Podesta was anxious to get back to his practice in Vicksburg, some 40 miles from Jackson, and states that he left the envelope on the dresser or some other place in the room, saying to Senator BILBO in the hearing of the others that here is a contribution obtained for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage fund from a good friend of yours or words to that effect, but that he did not tell Senator BILBO at that or any other time that the amount in the envelope was from John A. Carr. Carr stated that he was not closely acquainted with Senator BILBO and that he had never said anything to Senator BILBO about giving the money to Dr. Podesta.

Senator BILBO was interrogated about this matter after Terry had made his statement on the witness stand and Senator BILBO's bank accounts, both his personal and his Juniper Grove Baptist Church special fund were searched diligently and there was no evidence that Senator BILBO ever received the $1,000 in question or that he ever put it in any bank account. Senator BILBO states that he did not receive any money from John A. Carr through Dr. Podesta but that Dr. Podesta on numerous occasions did bring him donations made by friends of Dr. Podesta and of Senator BILBO as donations for the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and parsonage fund. Senator BILBO was not advised of Dr. Podesta's final statement or that of Dr. Logan or that of Mr. Carr when he testified in the hearing before the committee. His statement was, however, that he had not knowingly received any thousand dollars from Dr. Podesta or from John A. Carr for Juniper Grove Baptist Church fund.

Under this state of the record there is no evidence upon which there can be any suggestion of impropriety on the part of Senator BILBO.

CONCLUSION

In the foregoing analysis and response to the report of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, we have sincerely attempted to stay in the record of the testimony adduced before the subcommittee in its open hearings.

We have known Senator BILBO intimately for the past 34 years. As his attorney and as his friend, we confidently submit on the whole record, laying aside partisanship and prejudice, there is nothing to justify criticism or condemnation.

His entire public and private life has been thoroughly investigated by several departments of the Government and by two committees of the United States Senate. There, of course, may be sharp differences of opinion as to the ideologies which Senator BILBO entertains, but if the Constitution and congressional precedents are to prevail, he is entitled to continue to represent the people of Mississippi, who have thrice elected him to the United States Senate, twice as governor of his State, once as lieutenant governor, and once as State senator.

Our sincere desire is that a correct interpretation of the record may prevail and that complete justice may be done in all fairness.

Respectfully,

FORREST B. JACKSON,
Attorney and friend of Senator Bilbo.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I will gladly yield to the Senator from Kentucky if by yielding I do not lose the floor or any of the rights I now have.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to take the Senator from the floor. I would not ask him to yield unless he could resume after I make the statement which I now propose to make.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the Senator from Kentucky will obtain unanimous consent that I not lose the floor by yielding I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Louisiana may yield to me without losing the floor, if after yielding he desires to continue to occupy it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Very well.

The SECRETARY. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT AS TO CREDENTIALS OF SENATOR-ELECT FROM MISSISSIPPI, ETC.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, I am sure that all Senators and the country at large are anxious for the Senate to compose the situation which now confronts it and to proceed to an orderly organization of the Senate in order that it may function as a part of the legislative branch of the Government. The Senator-elect from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], whose credentials have been filed and lie on the desk for such action as the Senate may see fit to take, has, along with other Senators-elect, presented himself to be sworn in as a Senator from the State of Mississippi. The indications are that in deciding the matter finally the Senate would be involved in controversial debate, the determination of which is indefinite, regardless of the merits of the controversy. I think I may say it is the wish of all Senators, without regard to politics, to reach at once some disposition of the matter which will not interfere with the orderly procedure of the Senate in its legislative duties.

The Senator-elect from Mississippi has been a Member of this body for 12 years. Whatever anyone may think of the Senator-elect or the policies which he advocates, or his suitability as a Member of the Senate, I think it is fair to say that no one would regard him as not having the courage to defend himself and his policies wherever defense may be called upon or required.

The Senator-elect from Mississippi is an ill man. Following the adjournment of the Congress on the 2d day of last August, Mr. BILBO went to the Naval Hospital at Bethesda for observation and for a check-up. He had an infection in the mouth which the physicians at the Naval Medical Center pronounced as cancer. It was decided, and in that conclusion Dr. Calver, who, as we all know, is the official physician assigned by the Navy Department to the Congress, concurred, that an immediate operation was necessary in the interest of the health of the then Senator from Mississippi. He went to New Orleans and on the 31st day of August, Dr. Alton Oschner, one of the outstanding surgeons of the South, who came originally from Wisconsin, and was at one time connected with the Mayo Institute at Rochester, Minn., performed an operation on the mouth of the Senator from Mississippi, in which a considerable portion of the lower jaw was removed, and there the diagnosis of cancer was confirmed by Dr. Oschner.

Since that time developments in the health of the Senator-elect from Mississippi have required that another operation be performed. Dr. Oschner desired to perform that operation on the 26th of December last. Senator BILBO insisted that he could not undergo the operation then because it would require him to be in the hospital at a time when his seat in the Senate was being questioned and asked that the operation be postponed until such time as he could return, after disposition in the Senate of the question involving his right to a seat.

The Senator-elect from Mississippi has advised me that he is compelled, in the interest of his health—and it may be in the interest of his life—to return immediately to New Orleans in order that the operation which Dr. Oschner desired to perform on the 26th of December, involving the removal of a larger portion of the lower jaw, two glands in the throat of the Senator-elect, and possibly a malignant growth in his cheek, may be completed at the earliest possible date. The Senator-elect from Mississippi desires to return to New Orleans for that operation at once, and he is planning to leave the city either tonight or tomorrow for that purpose.

I may add that the Senator-elect from Mississippi came to me this morning to inform me of this situation, and I said to him what I think any Senator, or any friend or acquaintance would say, namely, that the preservation of a man's life is more important to him than a seat in the United States Senate or any other body. I think we would all agree that that is true.

After consultation this morning over the telephone with Dr. Oschner, and in confirmation of what I have said, Dr. Calver has sent to the Presiding Officer of the Senate a statement which I ask to have read.

The SECRETARY. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE ATTENDING PHYSICIAN,
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1947.

PRESIDING OFFICER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Subject: Report on physical condition of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO.

DEAR SIR: After the completion of his primary campaign, Senator BILBO reported to my office with a badly ulcerated mouth. He was sent to the medical center for study and his condition was diagnosed as cancer. He was referred to Dr. Alton Oschner, of New Orleans, for consultation and indicated treatment. Dr. Oschner removed a mass of tissue from the Senator's mouth with the hope that all the cancerous growth had been destroyed.

During his convalescence, the Senator developed an infection in the jawbone at the site of the operation. One small sliver of dead bone was removed. There is another large one still in the wound with an apparent extension of the infection. This dead bone should be removed immediately and other enlarged glands be investigated for an extension of the cancerous growth without delay.

I consulted with Dr. Oschner by telephone this morning and he concurs in this recommendation and advises me that the convalescence from the operation will take approximately 2 months.

Respectfully yours,
GEORGE W. CALVER.

Mr. BARKLEY. In conversation with Dr. Calver this morning he advised me that following this operation a minimum of 6 weeks, and probably 2 months, will be required before the Senator-elect from Mississippi may be able to return to Washington. That, of course, would be governed by circumstances and by the rate of recovery from the operation.

In view of this situation, and after consultation with Members on both sides of the Chamber, including friends of the Senator-elect from Mississippi and the Senator-elect himself, I ask unanimous consent that the credentials of the Senator-elect from Mississippi, Mr. THEODORE G. BILBO, lie on the table without prejudice and without action until such time as he is able to return, in view of his physical condition, and to be here when they shall later be taken up, or until such time as the Senate itself may order them to be taken up for consideration; that all other Senators-elect who are entitled to take the oath of office be permitted immediately to be sworn in in groups of four, except that the Senator-elect from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and the Senator-elect from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], who are in the first group of four—the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] already having been sworn in, and the Senator-elect from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], stepping aside under this unanimous-consent agreement—be sworn in as a group; and that following that, the other Senators-elect be allowed to take the oath of office immediately in groups of four, alphabetically.

I also ask that the certificate of the Senator-elect from Mississippi lie on the table without prejudice and without action until such time as the official physician assigned to the Congress, Dr. Calver, certifies that he is able to return here, under the unanimous-consent request, or until such time as the Senate itself may take action.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, the Senator from Kentucky has consulted me regarding this agreement. I have consulted other Senators on this side of the aisle, and I think I may say that there is unanimous approval of the agreement which he proposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. Secretary, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yesterday, and again today, I suggested that perhaps I would read into the RECORD the complete hearings before the special committee which was sent to Mississippi. Being a member of that committee, I embrace this opportunity to ask Senators to take the trouble to read the hearings. They are quite extensive. They will be printed. I will not ask that they be printed in the RECORD, but I hope that every Senator will have the opportunity of reading the hearings, so that Senators may familiarize themselves not only with the laws of Mississippi, but with the work which the committee did in Mississippi in connection with the hearings.

The SECRETARY. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, the Senator-elect from Ohio, Hon. JOHN W. BRICKER, is in the Chamber. His credentials have been filed, and I ask that he be sworn at this time, together with the Senator-elect from Maine.

The SECRETARY. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion?

Mr. WHITE. The motion that I made yesterday, that the Senator-elect from Maine be sworn, is still before the Senate. In view of the arrangement just entered into, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that motion.

The SECRETARY. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Secretary, I withdraw the request for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WHITE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 4), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The SECRETARY. The Chair appoints the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] as the committee to wait upon the President under the resolution just agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 5), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING

Mr. WHERRY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 6), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian unless otherwise ordered.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

Mr. WHITE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 7), which was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, a Senator from the State of Michigan, be, and he is hereby, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold office during the pleasure of the Senate, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate adopted on the 12th day of March 1890 on the subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, by direction of the conference of the minority, I move that the name of Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR, Senator from Tennessee, be substituted for the name of Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, of Michigan.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Secretary, since there has been a change in the political complexion of the Senate, and in view of the fact that our Republican friends have selected one of the best of their number to preside over the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] be withdrawn, and that the Senator from Michigan be given the unanimous endorsement of the Senate for election as its presiding officer. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Secretary, notwithstanding the uncertainty involved in the result of the vote about to be taken, but at the urgent request of the Senator from Tennessee, I withdraw my amendment.

The SECRETARY. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn, and the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine is unanimously agreed to.

The Chair designates the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to escort the newly elected President pro tempore to the chair.

Thereupon, Mr. VANDENBERG, escorted by Mr. MCKELLAR, advanced to the desk, and the oath was administered to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I am deeply grateful to my friends on both sides of the aisle for their generous consideration, and I shall undertake to the best of my ability to justify their confidence and faith.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY OF THE SENATE

Mr. BRIDGES submitted a resolution (S. Res. 8), which was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, by direction of the conference of the minority, I move to substitute the name of Hon. Wall Doxey for that of Mr. Edward F. McGinnis.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will observe that I am taking advantage of the first opportunity I have had to be initiated into the duties of minority leader of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair takes note of that fact, and also notes that the distinguished Senator has changed his disguise for the purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, apropos of the Chair's remarks, more or less ex cathedra, with regard to my addition, hirsutically speaking, I wish merely to say that on the 5th of November the people of this country voted for a change, and I have given them one worth while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN OF THE SENATE

Mr. WHERRY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 10), which was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved, That Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., of the District of Columbia, be, and he is hereby, elected Chaplain of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I regret most sincerely that I find it my duty to raise any question about the election of a Chaplain of this body. During all my service in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, so far as I can now recall, there has never been any question of partisanship in the selection of a Chaplain.

When I came to the House of Representatives, Dr. Couden, blind Chaplain of the House, had been Chaplain for many years, and he was retained as long as he wished to remain, and I think was then retired upon pension by the House of Representatives. Following him, Dr. James Shera Montgomery was elected, and has been the Chaplain of the House of Representatives ever since, and has been reelected to that position notwithstanding the change in the political complexion of the House.

When the Democrats came into control of the Senate in 1932 Dr. Zé Barney T. Phillips, who was the pastor of Epiphany Episcopal Church in Washington, had been the Chaplain of the Senate since 1927, when he was elected by the Republican majority of the Senate as the Chaplain, and, as I recall, without any partisan division. Dr. Phillips remained as Chaplain of the Senate from 1927 until his death on May 10, 1942, a period of 15 years. He remained the Chaplain of the Senate notwithstanding there had been a change in the political control of the Senate.

Mr. President, I do not know the politics of Dr. Marshall, whose name has been presented. Neither do I know the politics of Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, who has been Chaplain of the Senate now for 4 years. I never asked him his politics. I was never interested in knowing whether he was a Democrat or a Republican. He was chosen 4 years ago as the Chaplain of the Senate.

To me it seems peculiarly unfortunate, in view of the previous record of the Senate and the House in regard to the chaplaincy, which ought to be above politics, and to be based upon a man's qualifications—and I am not saying anything about the qualifications of the gentleman who has been nominated—that Dr. Harris should be denied reelection because of a change in the political complexion of the Senate. Dr. Harris has been a very faithful Chaplain of the Senate. He has been Chaplain during a very critical period, the war period, in which he has performed his duties acceptably. He has been Chaplain during a period in which the Senate required that every session be opened with prayer, regardless of whether it was after an adjournment or recess, whereas previous to that, under the custom of the Senate to recess frequently for weeks at a time, the Chaplain was not required to appear except when there was an adjournment of the Senate.

Dr. Harris is one of the outstanding divines, not only of Washington but of the country. He has been an exchange pastor between this country and other countries. His prayers, which have been published by order of the Senate, have been appreciated, I think, by the religious people generally throughout the country. It seems to me unfortunate that he should be denied reelection because of a change in the political complexion of the Senate.

Therefore, I feel it my duty, in the interest of justice, to move that his name be substituted in the resolution for that of Rev. Peter Marshall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on the majority of the Senate falls the duty of making recommendations for filling the various offices of the Senate. The majority has a special committee on personnel, a small committee, which reports to the majority conference as a whole. That committee, after consideration, felt that, since the Republican Party was returning to the control of the Senate after a long period, no mistake would be made in the selection of a Chaplain if we turned to the pastor of the church of Abraham Lincoln, the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. We thought that would be fitting and appropriate.

Dr. Marshall, whom we have nominated, is a sincere, devout, able, conscientious, spiritual man. He was not a candidate for the position and in no way sought it. Like the minority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I do not know Dr. Marshall's politics. He has never been one of those privileged gentlemen who could vote, because for many years he has resided in the District of Columbia, where he has had no vote.

Our presentation of Dr. Marshall's name is in no way a reflection on the standing or the fine service rendered by Dr. Harris. The Senate could change its Chaplain every year, and has changed Chaplains from time to time in its history. Personally, I think it would be well to have a rotation, so that different Chaplains representing different religious denominations could serve in the office of Chaplain of the Senate. Dr. Marshall, whom I think many Senators on both sides know and have heard, is an able speaker and a great religious leader.

I say that the matter was presented to the conference without his being in any way a candidate or indicating his acceptance of this call until after his name had been adopted by the Republican conference.

I hate to see the office of Chaplain of this body in any way enter into a political discussion, because I think it is absolutely unnecessary, and I think for our good and the good of the country, that the nomination, as presented by the majority, should go forward in the regular way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, just a word. I recognize the power which lies in the majority to make the selection. I regret that it seems to be that a deviation has been made from the unbroken rule here as far as I can recall, in regard to this particular office. I might say that, notwithstanding the power which exists in the majority to do this thing, I think it should be said in good faith that they are setting us a very poor example for the time when we resume control of the Senate 2 years from now.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I seem to remember that Dr. Harris was selected as a candidate in the Democratic caucus about 2 or 3 years ago. Am I not correct in that statement? I remember there was a contest in the Democratic caucus, and Dr. Harris was selected.

Mr. BARKLEY. There occurred the death of Dr. Phillips, who had been retained as Chaplain from 1932 to 1942, although he had been previously selected by the Republican caucus, so there was a vacancy in the chaplainship. We did not make any change. We continued him in the office of Chaplain for 10 years. He died, and we had to select someone else, and we selected Dr. Harris.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am quite satisfied in my own mind that if Dr. Marshall had for one moment known that there would have been any contest relative to his selection as Chaplain of the Senate he never would have permitted his name to have been put before the Senate of the United States.

I wish to say that Dr. Marshall is neither a Republican nor a Democrat. He was born at Coalbridge, Scotland, studied engineering, and for 6 years was employed in the steel-mill tubes in Scotland.

In 1927 he determined to study for the ministry, and, leaving his native land, he came to the United States. For a time he worked in New Jersey, moved on to Birmingham, Ala., to obtain employment on the Birmingham News, and then moved to Decatur, Ga., to enter Columbia Theological Seminary. He graduated from the seminary in 1931. Dr. Marshall held two pastorates in Georgia, the second being at Atlanta Westminster Presbyterian Church, where his reputation as a speaker and theologian expanded rapidly. At that time he applied for citizenship in the United States, and he later became a citizen.

He was at Westminster Church in Atlanta when called in 1937 to the pulpit of historic New York Avenue Presbyterian Church here in Washington.

Dr. Marshall told me that he had not voted in any election. So no one can charge even a political basis. That is impossible.

From a religious point of view, I regret that there should be any controversy over this matter. I know that Dr. Marshall is a devout man. He is one of the outstanding ministers not only of Washington but of the United States. I say to the Senate that this man, if elected Chaplain of the United States Senate, will add dignity and reverence to this body. He can fill the shoes of anyone who has been Chaplain during the long history of the United States Senate. By what we propose to do there is no reflection upon Dr. Harris. If I had known when I submitted this resolution that it would have been interpreted in the light it has been, I would certainly have said more than I said when I submitted it.

I like Dr. Harris very much indeed. I have enjoyed his prayers as much as has any other Senator; and I think I can say that I have heard as many of his prayers as any other Senator has heard. I do not wish for a moment to have our present action considered as any reflection upon Dr. Harris. I have the highest regard for him. I know I speak the sentiments of every Senator when I say that he is beloved by the membership of the Senate. I was told by the personnel committee that they wanted a nomination for the chaplaincy, and I offered the name of Dr. Marshall. I have been a member of his church for four years. As a member of his church, and one who knows him, I wish to say that he is not only an outstanding minister, but a very devout person. I regret exceedingly that another name has been submitted for this office. I appeal to Senators on this side of the aisle as well as to Senators on the other side of the aisle. I ask the minority leader to withdraw his amendment, and that this body declare the unanimous vote of the Senate in favor of Dr. Marshall to be Chaplain of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I am sure that everything that has been said about Dr. Marshall is true. I am sure that he must be a wonderful man, a great preacher, and a fine spiritual leader. But I must say that I was astounded yesterday morning when I picked up the Washington Post and saw that the majority conference had agreed to bring to an end the services of Dr. Harris.

I remember, as a Democratic Member of the House of Representatives, that when the Democrats came into power in the House in 1931 no question was raised by any Democrat about the continuation of the services as Chaplain of the House of Dr. James Shera Montgomery. As the distinguished minority leader has said, when the Democrats came into power in the Senate there was no question about the continuation of the services as Chaplain of the Senate of the late lamented Dr. ZeBarney Phillips. So far as I know, it has been the custom, practice, and precedent of the Senate and of the House to continue Chaplains in the service irrespective of which party might be in power. As the distinguished minority leader has well said, the Senate has never had a Chaplain in all its history who has carried so heavy a burden as has Dr. Harris. He was here during the strenuous days of the war. He came here shortly after we changed the rules of the Senate so as to provide for prayer by the Chaplain at the beginning of every calendar day, rather than at the beginning of every legislative day. He has delivered more than 500 prayers in this body for the Senate of the United States. It is known among men that his prayers are appreciated throughout the country. He came to the Senate day after day only to pray, only to bring us beautiful and moving prayers, prayers of great power, great inspiration, and great light. He came to the Senate only as a servant of God.

I for one sorely regret to see him now turned out of the Senate without any warning and without notice. The first notice that Dr. Harris had, according to my understanding, was when he read yesterday morning's newspaper. If there is one fundamental tenet of the American creed it is the absolute separation of church and state, the separation of politics and religion; the fundamental conviction that the politician's reach shall not touch the sacred vestments of the ministry.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Did I correctly understand the Senator from Alabama to say that the first time that Dr. Harris knew that he was not to be the Chaplain of the Senate was when he read it in the newspaper?

Mr. HILL. That is my understanding. He might have heard some rumor about it before, but it is my understanding that his first knowledge that he was not to continue, under all the practices and precedents of the Senate, as the Chaplain of this body, was when he read the story in yesterday morning's newspaper. It came without warning, without consideration, and without any notice, that his services in this body had been decreed to be ended by the Republican majority.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I speak with a great deal of sincerity because I am very fond of Dr. Harris. Has it been the custom at any time to elect a Chaplain of the Senate according to political faith, or political party?

Mr. HILL. Not to my knowledge. In the 20-odd years I have been in the Congress of the United States, no question of the Chaplain's politics or his political faith has ever been raised. I have cited, as the minority leader has cited, precedents and practices to show that there has never been any question raised about politics or political faith. When I, as a Democratic Member of the House of Representatives, voted to continue as Chaplain of the House of Representatives the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, it never occurred to me to ask whether he was a Democrat or a Republican. I did not care. The idea of politics never entered my mind. I knew that in the first instance he had been elected by Republicans, but I did not think that any question of politics should enter into the election of the Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have not finished.

Mr. HILL. I yield first to the Senator from New Mexico, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HATCH. Despite the denials which have been made, and despite the fine assertions which have been made, is it not perfectly clear from the record that is written here today that partisan politics is this day depriving Dr. Harris of his place as Chaplain of the Senate, and supplanting him by someone else?

Mr. HILL. Certainly the action today will be viewed by the people throughout the country as action to throw out of the Senate one of the great spiritual leaders, one of the great preachers in the great Methodist Church.

Mr. President, I deplore the action which is proposed. I think it is most unfortunate for the Senate and for the country. I think it is a sad day in the history of the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I think the remarks of the Senator from Alabama and of the Senator from New Mexico are absolutely uncalled for, unjustified, and unfair. There is absolutely no politics involved in this question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. If we are to enter into a political debate, there are certain things to be said, and I shall not hesitate to say them; but I hope to keep this discussion on a very high level.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. BRIDGES. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have before me a list of the Chaplains in the United States Senate from April 25, 1789, up to the present date. Contained in that list are some renowned and eminent men. I am putting this discussion on a positive basis. I paid a high tribute to Dr. Harris. Instead of accusing anybody on the other side of any ulterior motive, I made a positive case for a great man, a great religious leader, and I ask that it be decided on a positive issue, not by playing partisan politics with the chaplaincy of the Senate.

I ask that a list of all the former Chaplains of the Senate be inserted in the RECORD, together with their denominations, the dates of changes and appointments, and the salaries paid them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list is as follows:

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire has referred to what the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from New Mexico have said as unfair. The Senator happens to come from New England, glorious New England, as we are wont to say. In the language of the Concord philosopher, let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire—

What you are cries out so loudly that I cannot hear what you say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 10) was agreed to.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY FOR THE MAJORITY

Mr. WHITE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 11), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That J. Mark Trice, of Maryland, be, and he is hereby, elected secretary for the majority of the Senate.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY FOR THE MINORITY

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 12), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Felton M. Johnston, of Mississippi, be, and he is hereby, elected secretary for the minority of the Senate.

Mr. BROOKS. The secretary for the majority, the secretary for the minority, and the Sergeant at Arms are all present, and I ask that they be sworn in now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that they take no additional oath.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WHITE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 13), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be notified of the election of Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, a Senator from the State of Michigan, as President of the Senate pro tempore, and of Carl A. Loeffler, of Pennsylvania, as Secretary of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. WHITE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 14), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, a Senator from the State of Michigan, as President of the Senate pro tempore, and of Carl A. Loeffler, of Pennsylvania, as Secretary of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WHITE and Mr. BARKLEY advanced in the center aisle, and Mr. WHITE said:

Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Secretary under the resolution adopted earlier today to act in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to notify the President that the Congress is assembled and ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, has performed its duty. The President conveys his felicitations to this body and advises that he will address the House and Senate in joint session on Monday at 1 o'clock p. m.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 1) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 6th day of January 1947, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to say a further word about the resolution. It provides for meeting at 1 o'clock. It seems to me that in accordance with long precedent there should be no business of a legislative character transacted until the President has sent his message or delivered his message to the Congress in joint session. I express the very earnest hope that neither this afternoon nor on Monday, prior to the delivery of the message, will any Senator offer any bill or resolution for the consideration of this body. I think the Senator from Kentucky, whose experience is much longer than mine, and whose knowledge is much greater than mine, will concur in what I have just said as to the practice of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am happy to do so. It has been the custom of the Senate, out of courtesy to the President, not to introduce bills or resolutions until he has communicated with the Congress on the state of the Union; and I agree to the suggestion of the Senator.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BARRY, OF NEW YORK

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 15) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BARRY, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HENRY, OF WISCONSIN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 16) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ROBERT K. HENRY, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GALLAGHER, OF MINNESOTA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

House Resolution 8

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S., January 3, 1947.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM J. GALLAGHER, a Representative from the State of Minnesota.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 17) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM J. GALLAGHER, late a Representative from the State of Minnesota.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in view of what has been said as to the joint meeting of the two Houses at 1 o'clock on Monday next, and in view of the further fact that no business is expected to be transacted until the President's message has been delivered, I see no reason for meeting earlier than 12:30 on Monday. Unless there is some other business to be transacted at this time, I move that the Senate stand in adjournment until 12:30 p. m. on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 6, 1947, at 12:30 p. m.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 6, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, if ever we needed Thy wisdom and Thy guidance, it is now—as the Congress begins a new session, standing upon the threshold of a new year, fraught with so many dangerous opportunities. We pray that Thou wilt bless these men chosen by the people of this Nation, for Thou knowest them, their needs, their motives, their hopes, and their fears. Lord Jesus, put Thine arm around them to give them strength, and speak to them to give them wisdom greater than their own. May they hear Thy voice, and seek Thy guidance. May they remember that Thou art concerned about what is said and done here, and may they have clear conscience before Thee, that they need fear no man. Bless each of us according to our deepest need, and use us for Thy glory, we humbly ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

ATTENDANCE OF A SENATOR

GUY CORDON, a Senator from the State of Oregon, appeared in his seat today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 3, and Saturday, January 4, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in accordance with previous action of the Senate and House of Representatives under House Concurrent Resolution No. 1, the Senate is to meet with the House at 1 o'clock to hear the message of the President of the United States. It has been suggested to me that the House would appreciate it if Members of the Senate presented themselves at the entrance to the House Chamber at a quarter to one. I think, therefore, that we should immediately proceed to the House.

Let me add that at the conclusion of the joint meeting the Senate will reassemble in its Chamber, and I hope there will be adequate opportunity for the transaction of morning business, and in particular for the election of the committees of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say for the minority that we shall be ready to report our committee assignments, which, according to custom, are brought to the attention of the Senate simultaneously with the majority assignments, so that the committees may be complete.

Following that, as I understand, we are to have a morning hour so that bills and joint resolutions may be introduced and other routine business transacted.

Mr. WHITE. Yes. Let me add that the report of the majority will be presented by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], who served as chairman of the Committee on Committees, which recommended the majority appointments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to be sure that the membership of the Senate understands the arrangements. We are departing forthwith for the joint meeting of the two Houses. Immediately upon the adjournment of the joint meeting the Senate will reassemble in its Chamber for the transaction of business.

The Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives for the joint meeting with the House to receive a message from the President of the United States. The Senate will stand in recess pending its return from the joint meeting.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, preceded by its Secretary (Carl A. Loeffler), its Sergeant at Arms (Edward F. McGinnis), and the President pro tempore, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives to hear the annual message of the President of the United States.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

(The annual message of the President of the United States this day delivered by him to the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress appears at p. 135 of the proceedings of the House of Representatives in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The joint meeting of the two Houses having been dissolved, the Senate returned to its Chamber at 2 o'clock p. m., and, the recess having expired, was called to order by the President pro tempore.

STANDING COMMITTEES AND ASSIGNMENTS THERETO

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair inquires whether the majority and minority leaders wish to submit their committee lists before the Senate proceeds with the morning hour.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I understood that both the majority and minority lists were prepared, and that Senators were ready to offer them. I understood the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] would present the majority list.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 18) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the following shall constitute the standing committees of the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Chair wish that both lists be read simultaneously so as to show the complete membership of each committee as it is called?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be preferable if both lists were presented together, and the full list of each committee announced.

Mr. BARKLEY. I present the minority list, by direction of the Democratic steering committee.

Thereupon the Chief Clerk read the list of committees and the assignments thereto, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the resolution is voted upon, I should like to ask a question or two and make some comment with respect to one or two phases of the committee assignments, with particular reference to the mathematical ratio.

Under the Reorganization Act, no Senator is permitted to enjoy membership on more than two committees, except that in the case of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments the majority members of those two committees may serve on two other committees.

The passage of the act undoubtedly created some confusion and difficulty in working out the mathematical proportions, somewhat different from the method heretofore adopted. Heretofore it has been customary, as a matter of courtesy on both sides, for the majority and minority leaders to confer in advance and agree upon a proportion of membership on the various committees, and the membership has always followed a mathematical ratio, depending upon the relative number of Senators on the respective sides, except in a case where some Member of the majority or minority had been on a committee for a long time and it was not desired that he be displaced, in which event he would be allowed to retain his position, even though it did disturb the mathematical ratio, with the understanding that the next vacancy that took place on the committee would go to the side which had yielded in order that a given member might not be displaced from the committee. In the main, that has been the only deviation from the mathematical ratio and proportion method.

I realize that the minority, having 45 Members, can have only 90 committee assignments, and that the majority can add to the committee assignments of members of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments two other assignments each, so that they would have 3, subject, of course, to the requirement of the law that a committee shall not be composed of exceeding 13 members in all cases, except the Committee on Appropriations, which may be composed of 21 members.

In the distribution of committee assignments it seems that the majority conference selected the Appropriations Committee on which to deviate from the mathematical proportion and ratio by assigning to itself 12 Members, and to the minority, 9 Members. On Public Lands, Rules, and Labor and Public Welfare, the majority decided, without consulting any Member of the minority—which, of course, was not required, but which has always been done—upon a ratio of 8 to 5. So, in the case of the Appropriations Committee the majority comes forward with a ratio of 12 to 9, and in the case of Public Lands, Labor, and Public Welfare, and Rules and Administration with a ratio of 8 to 5. Under the law and under the arrangement the minority would be entitled to 90 positions. There are, in other words, 14 committees consisting of 13 members, making a total of 182 assignments and one committee, Appropriations, with 21 members, making a total of 203 committee assignments under the Reorganization Act. Forty-five minority Members, each being entitled to 2, would make 90, which would leave 113 places for the majority, 51 majority Members, allowed 2 assignments each, would make 102 places, leaving what might be called 11 "floating" assignments for other Members of the majority; because if we of the minority get our 90, of course we are not entitled to any more in the total of the membership of the committees.

I cannot understand why it was that the majority picked out the Appropriations Committee, which has heretofore been governed by the numerical ratio, subject to the deviations which I have mentioned; the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Public Lands, as the four committees of the Senate on which there is to be a disproportionate allowance between the two sides of the Chamber.

I recognize the fact that the Appropriations Committee is one of the most important committees of the Senate, yet I do not see why it should take priority over other committees in the application of this disproportionate mathematical ratio.

It has made it necessary, as we think, to displace on that committee the fair proportion of minority representation.

There is on the minority side a little more than 46 percent of the membership of the Senate, but in the aggregate of committee appointments we have only about 43 percent.

We feel that the ratio on the Appropriations Committee should have been 11 to 10 instead of 12 to 9, and that if there were any disproportion to be brought about by giving the majority more than its numerical ratio on any committee, the Committee on Appropriations should not have been one of those, and also that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare should not have been one of the committees in which a ratio of 8 to 5 was established. We cannot understand why that committee was selected for this disproportionate ratio, unless there was a fear that at some time or other a Republican might vote with the Democrats and thereby upset the majority's plan. I do not know whether that is the reason, but in my own mind it is the only one I can imagine. I may be mistaken about that, but I recognize that it is the practical explanation of this unfair distribution of the membership of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, which I am sure is to be one of the important legislative committees at this session of the Congress.

In respect to the Committee on Public Lands, I grant that as a rule only Members from the Western States, the States where there are remaining public lands, are particularly interested in that committee. While it is not one of the outstanding legislative committees of the Senate, the proportion of 8 to 5 in the Committee on Public Lands gives to the majority a larger proportion than it is entitled to in dealing with the important subject of public lands, in which all western Senators, regardless of party, are interested.

So, granting that some members of the Committee on the District of Columbia and on Expenditures in the Executive Departments may be placed on two other committees—not all of them, but enough of them to make up the total number of committee assignments—I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming, or the majority leader, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], why these four committees, among all the committees of the Senate, were chosen for assignment of a larger number of Members of the majority than the numerical ratio would allow to be assigned?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, page 10, paragraph 4, of Public Law 601 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, provides, "Each Senator shall serve on two standing committees and no more; * * *." That is the first sentence of the paragraph. There are two exceptions, but the paragraph limits the minority party, on the 15 committees, to two committees for each Senator. In the case of 11 committees the ratio of 7 to 6 has been fixed. That will give the minority party 66 seats. In the case of three committees the ratio has been fixed at 8 to 5, which will give the minority party 15 additional seats, and in the case of one committee, the Appropriations Committee, the ratio of 12 to 9 has been provided, which will give the minority party another 9; making a total of 90 seats, which, with their membership of 45, is the total number of seats to which they are entitled under the act.

The Republican Conference felt it was entirely within its province to select the four committees on which it was necessary to increase the ratio from 7 to 6 to 8 to 5, in three cases, and from 12 to 9 rather than 11 to 10 in the case of the Appropriations Committee.

As the distinguished minority leader has said, the Republican majority is entitled to 113 seats on committees. I will say that I think the majority leader's suggestion as to why some committees were given a different proportion of membership is possibly correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator means the "minority" leader. Please get my present situation straight.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. I am so accustomed to refer to the Senator from Kentucky as the majority leader——

Mr. BARKLEY. I know how it is, and I will say that it is also a little difficult for me to adjust myself to the new situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. The reason why the Public Lands Committee was chosen as one on which there should be a larger Republican representation I think is self-evident. We have five new Republican Senators from the public-land States: The Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK], the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. It is natural that each of those Senators should take as his first preference for membership on a committee, the Public Lands Committee which has merged in itself five committees previously in existence, that is to say, the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the Committee on Indian Affairs. We felt it important that the Public Lands Committee should have an adequate representation, in membership, of Republicans from the West. We felt that the Committee on Rules and Administration was definitely an important one, and that we needed as strong a representation as possible on that committee. As I have said, we felt that the choice was entirely up to the Republican Party. I rest my presentation of the case on that statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the frankness of the Senator from Wyoming. I am not contending, and I am sure the Senator will recall that I did not contend that we are entitled to more than 90 places on behalf of the minority. The law which the Congress passed gives the majority, whichever side it may be, an advantage with respect to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments; yet I cannot help but deplore the fact that among the entire list of 15 committees the majority conference decided there should be a disproportionate ratio on the Appropriations Committee, the Committee on Rules and Administration, and the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. It seems to me that other committees might have been selected to take care of all the majority Members without what to me and to some of the other Senators on this side appears to be an unfair distribution on these three important committees of the Senate. I realize that we have no authority to change the situation, but I wanted to call attention to the fact that in the selection of these committees to be given the preference I speak of, there is an appearance—it may be a surface indication, but there is an appearance—that three of the most important committees have been selected on which to give the majority a larger membership than they are really entitled to under a fair consideration of committee division.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to say a very brief word in reply to only one of the comments made by the Senator from Kentucky. I appreciate that it has been true, as he said, that the representatives of the two sides have usually met and agreed upon a ratio, and have applied that ratio in the apportionment of committee places as between the two parties, and we have adhered to that ratio, except in special and particular circumstances. I would not want the Senator from Kentucky to think, I would not want any Member of the minority party to think that in such part as I had in working out these assignments I had gone ahead in ruthless disregard of past precedents or in disregard of whatever might be fair so far as the representation of the two parties on the committees of the Senate is concerned.

It is true that while I was chairman of the committee on committees I did much spadework, as it might be called, in making up the assignments to these committees, and although I did not sit down with the Senator from Kentucky and agree upon a ratio, I had put into the hands of a representative of the minority a complete proposed breakdown as suggested by the majority party. That was in the hands of a representative of the minority, and I thought a designated representative in whom both sides had complete confidence. It must have been put in the hands of that representative at least a month before the final working out of this apportionment.

I repeat I do not want anyone on the minority side to think I did not make an effort to confer with the minority or with their representatives, and to work out what seemed fair under the limitations of the statute under which we were operating.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to add that a few years ago, when the Democratic majority was composed of 75 Members, and the Republicans had only 17 Members in the Senate, the former minority leader, Mr. McNary, and I, representing our two sides, always conferred in advance before there was any ratio settlement, so that there would be no complaint that both sides had not been consulted. It was perfectly easy to figure out the mathematical ratio. Since the Senator from Maine has been minority leader we have done the same thing. We have always conferred about this matter in the past.

I have no knowledge of what the Senator has just said, that about a month ago someone on the minority side was brought into the picture. I never knew anything about that. I think probably it is true that discussions were had with reference to this matter. I am not contending that we are entitled to any more memberships on committees than we are receiving, but I think it might have been possible for us to have urged upon the majority, if we had been given that opportunity in time, that some other committees, in one or two cases, be chosen for the disproportionate representation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, what I do not like is the implication that we have been in any way unfair or partisan in this matter. Under the statute as it now exists there is no choice as to the ultimate result in the membership of the committees. That is to say there are, as I see it, 11 committees on which the membership is 7 to 6, as between the Republicans and Democrats, 3 committees on which the membership is 8 to 5, and 1 committee on which the membership is 12 to 9. Or, to put it in another way, on 11 of the 15 committees we have a majority of only 1 member; on the other 4 committees we must have a majority of 3 members. That is the only possible way to comply with the La Follette-Monroney Act. The only question is whether on any of those four committees there should be a majority of three instead of a majority of one. I respectfully submit that that question can only be determined by the majority and should be determined by the majority.

It is not true either in the House or the Senate when the membership of the two parties has been very close that we have always followed a percentage agreement. In the House there have been frequent occasions when the majority party has placed on the main committees a sufficient number of members to give the majority a clear control. There are many reasons why that is needed. I think it rather unfortunate that by reason of the fact that the committees add up to an odd number, 15, we cannot have a majority of 2 on each. That probably would have been a fairer distribution. But, as a matter of fact, in 1917, when in the Senate there were 53 Democrats and 42 Republicans, which is about the closest division of membership we have ever had, the Democrats placed 12 of their Members on the Appropriations Committee, while the Republicans had only 8. In other words, the Democrats claimed a 60 percent representation on the committee, although the Democratic representation in the Senate itself was less than 60 percent.

So, also in 1919, when the Republicans had a majority of only one in the Senate, they maintained a majority of two Members on the Appropriations Committee, two on the Committee on the Judiciary, three on the Committee on Foreign Relations Committee, and three on the Committee on Finance.

There are many reasons why, when a party has the responsibility for a program, it is inconvenient and dangerous to have a majority of only one Member on a committee. A Senator may be sick. He may be unable for other reasons to attend committee meetings. There may be many reasons why Senators may have a legitimate and conscientious difference of opinion with Members of their own party upon committees. There are many reasons why, if we are to control the Senate, we need more than a majority of one on committees. I think we have been perfectly reasonable, and I cannot see why any party in the majority, under the circumstances of the particular law, should not choose the four most important committees on which to have a majority of three, in order that it might have clear control of those committees under all circumstances. I think that is perfectly legitimate legislative procedure. I feel perfectly confident that the Democrats would have done the same thing under the circumstances. I do not believe it can be truthfully said that we have been in any way unfair.

Heretofore the apportionment has been entirely a matter of agreement. Under the new law the apportionment is fixed. There is no alternative to having four committees with disproportionate representation, and it seems to me that we must reasonably ask that we have the privilege of selecting the four committees.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table showing the assignments on the more important committees since 1917, and the ratio of representation.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Date membership to standing committees named	Committee	Republicans	Democrats	Senate membership
Mar. 12, 1917	Finance	7	10	42 Republicans.
	Foreign Relations	7	10	53 Democrats.
	Judiciary	8	10	1 other party.

	Attempts made in Senate by motions and amendments to change the ratio between Republicans and Democrats were defeated.
May 27, 1920	A resolution was agreed to in the Senate, submitted by Mr. Knox, chairman of the Rules Committee, and agreed to after its being reported from the Rules Committee, changing the numbers in the membership of the standing committees for the beginning of the 67th Cong., for example, Finance, 15; Foreign Relations, 15; Judiciary, 15; Appropriations, 15.
Apr. 13, 1921	At the beginning of the 67th Cong., Mr. Brandegee submitted a resolution which changed the numbers in the membership of the standing committees as fixed by the resolution agreed to May 27, 1920. Attempts were made in the Senate to change this resolution by motions and amendments, but these were defeated. The numbers for the following committees were fixed in the resolution as agreed to by the Senate: Finance, 16; Foreign Relations, 16; Judiciary, 16; Appropriations, 16. Assignments were then made in this ratio:

Mr. La Follette, Jr., first appointed to the Committees on Finance and Foreign Relations on Jan. 7, 1935, was carried in the list of Republican assignments through and including the list of Jan. 10, 1945.

[1] Mr. Shipstead included.
[2] 13 and 1 vacancy
[3] 10 and 1 vacancy.
[4] 15 and 1 vacancy.
[5] 11 and 2 vacancies.
[6] Mr. Shipstead from this time on was included in the Republican assignments and not separately as Farm-Labor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, there is a slight correction to be made in the minority representation on two of the committees.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. On further investigation I do not believe it can be corrected. I should like to suggest to the minority leader that we defer the selection of our places on the committees until this matter can be cleared up.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not like to defer the election of all minority Members until a new situation arising between two Senators can be cleared up.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to make an explanation. There is no argument between the two Senators. It seems to me that there has been a mistake on the part of the committee. I expressly requested that I remain on the Committee on Public Lands, on which I already have a high seniority position. I also wish to remain on the Labor Committee. I expressly asked to be relieved from service on the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the understanding that I was to have assignments on the two committees which I have named, to which I am entitled by reason of my seniority. There is no question between the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and myself on this matter, so far as the Committee on Public Lands is concerned.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the situation which has arisen since the steering committee made these selections, in the hope that we may iron out the difficulty during the afternoon, I am compelled to withdraw the minority list. I do not know whether that should be done with respect to all committees, but, inasmuch as some change may be required, I ask that the minority list be temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I understand that that may be done without interfering with the adoption of the majority report.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to interfere with that part of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky withdraws the minority list. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON]. Without objection, the language of the resolution will be amended to indicate that the list represents the majority membership, and not the full membership of the committees. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, with the resolving clause reading as follows:

Resolved, That the following shall constitute the majority members of the standing committees of the Senate for the Eightieth Congress.

ORDER OF BUSINESS IN MORNING HOUR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to make a statement regarding the order of business in the morning hour.

A new Congress is starting. We are all familiar with the embarrassment and difficulties which have arisen in years past in connection with interruptions to the orderly process of the morning hour. The orderly procedure during the morning hour is disturbed when Senators disregard the order in which business is scheduled under the rules, and when the morning hour is interrupted by speeches which are not in order at that time under the rules.

The matter is largely in the hands of Senators themselves. The Chair certainly has no disposition to be technical in interrupting Senators who may claim attention during the morning hour; but the Chair asks, in the spirit of cooperation, that the Senate undertake to meet an objective which the Chair is certain is very clearly advisable in the opinion of those of us who have been Members of the Senate for some time. That objective is that the morning hour be conducted with regularity and without interruption.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Chair for that announcement in advance. As the Chair and other Senators know, for years I have sought to have the rules pertaining to the morning hour observed meticulously. I have been one of those—and still am—who contend that it is the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule, whether or not any Senator makes a point of order that the rule is being violated. In my judgment that is especially true in conducting business in the morning hour. The Chair has before him the order of procedure. It is sometimes embarrassing, and has frequently been embarrassing to me, to object to speeches being made during the morning hour. In my capacity as majority leader during the past several years I have frequently called attention to the rule and have asked the cooperation of Senators; but I still believe that it is the primary duty of the Chair to enforce the rule. The Chair can do so without embarrassment. I hope Senators will cooperate with the Chair. I commend the Chair for the very wise announcement which he has made before we again get into the habit of violating the rule.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to express my complete approval of the statement made by the Chair, and my desire and intention to cooperate with the Chair in such ways as I can in the effort he is making.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wish to submit an amendment to the rules of the Senate relating to——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will temporarily subside until we reach that order of business, we can proceed in the spirit of the colloquy which has just occurred.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I believe that the announcement just made by the Chair answers the question which I was about to propound. I had been seeking recognition, thinking that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] was the question about to be put. I wished to make a few remarks on that resolution, but the Chair is proceeding with the morning hour, and I shall defer my remarks.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Usually during the morning hour speeches and other matters are offered for inclusion in the Appendix of the RECORD. At what point in the morning hour should such requests be made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing in the rules on the subject. It is entirely a matter of unanimous consent. As a matter of procedure, the Chair would prefer to consider such requests under the head of petitions and memorials.

Mr. TAFT. As I understand, that is the first order of business following matters laid down by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a series of bills, but before sending them to the desk I wish to make a few brief comments on several of them. First, permit me to say that I think the President in his message today demonstrated very clearly that he can rise above partisan politics and act on behalf of the interests of the country as he sees those interests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Would the Senator be willing to submit his bills and be recognized to make a statement at the conclusion of the morning hour?

Mr. MORSE. Let me ask, Mr. President, if it is proper for me to make brief explanatory remarks at the time I introduce these bills because I prefer to do it that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that a brief explanatory remark is within the spirit of the rule which we are trying to follow.

Mr. MORSE. Then, suppose that the junior Senator from Oregon defer introducing his bills until we finish with the morning hour and then when I am recognized I can take whatever time I need to comment upon my bills. I feel that a few comments are necessary by way of explanation of several of my bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the petition of Tom Sweeney, contesting the right of Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE to a seat in the Senate of the United States because of alleged errors, irregularities, illegalities, and fraud in the general election in West Virginia on November 5, 1946, which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SENATOR FROM MARYLAND ELECTION CONTEST

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the petition of D. John Markey, of Walkersville, Md., contesting the right of Hon. HERBERT R. O'CONOR to a seat in the Senate because of alleged errors and irregularities in the general election on November 5, 1946, in Maryland, which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the petition of Lester S. Parsons, contesting the right of Hon. HARRY F. BYRD to a seat in the Senate from the State of Virginia for the term beginning January 3, 1947, based on a provision in the constitution of the State of Virginia requiring the laying of a poll tax against its citizens, which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore and referred as indicated:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Public Works:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 5

"Relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to the inundation of State Highways 77 and 192 by the waters impounded by Prado Dam in Riverside County, Calif., and remedial legislation in connection with this and similar situations

"Whereas State Highway Route 77 comprises the inland route between the cities of Los Angeles and San Diego via Pomona and Temecula; and

"Whereas State Highway Route 192 runs from State Highway Route 77 to Upland in San Bernardino County and connects the State highway system within said county with said inland route between Los Angeles and San Diego; and

"Whereas the United States of America, acting through the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, has caused to be constructed a flood-control project known as the Prado Dam in the Santa Ana River; and

"Whereas the operation of Prado flood control project subjects portions of State highways 77 and 192 lying near the juncture thereof, in Riverside and San Bernardino Counties, to periodic inundation and renders such portions unusable for considerable periods at a time and destroys their value and usability as a part of the State highway system and causes great inconvenience to many thousands of people residing in Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Riverside, and Orange Counties, and other adjacent areas in the State of California; and

"Whereas pursuant to State law requiring the State department of public works to maintain any traversable route between the termini of, and approximately on, any route included in the State highway system, said department took over the roads in question from Riverside and San Bernardino Counties, respectively, in 1931 and 1933, and said roads have at all times since been under the full possession and control of said department as State highways and at State expense; and

"Whereas the legislature by section 24 of the Streets and Highways Code has defined "State highway" to be any highway that is maintained as a State highway pursuant to legislative authorization and has since the year 1925 considered, dealt with, and appropriated funds for the maintenance of such traversable highways as State highways; and

"Whereas the District Court of the United States, Southern District of California, Central Division, has rendered a decision affecting said highways, which decision appears to have the effect on technical grounds of relieving the United States of its obligation to relocate said highways or to reimburse the State of California for the relocation thereof; and

"Whereas said highways, routes 77 and 192, within said Prado flood-control project, have, in fact, been treated as State highways, maintained as such, and considered as such by all parties concerned, including the State of California and said counties and Federal engineers; and

"Whereas unless the United States assumes its obligation in the premises, the State of California is faced with an expenditure that may exceed a million dollars for relocation of said highways which have been rendered unusable by the construction of said Prado Dam by the United States, which expenditure, as a matter of policy and of justice, the State of California should not be called upon to bear, particularly in view of the fact that the Federal flood-control policy contemplates and the law provides that the United States shall bear all of the cost of the lands, easements, flowage rights, and highway, railway, and utility relocation involved in the construction of such a flood-control project (sec. 701c–1, title 33, U. S. Code); and

"Whereas the United States of America should be far above any action which even remotely resembles an attempt to avoid on technical grounds an obligation to one of its constituent States to save it harmless from any damage caused to its highways by reason of flood-control works under a statute which contemplates that the entire expense and burden shall be borne by the United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully memorialized and requested to take such steps as may be necessary:

"1. To provide for the relocation of those portions of State highways 77 and 192 of the State of California which are within said Prado flood-control basin below the elevation of said Prado Dam in San Bernardino and Riverside Counties, Calif., or to provide for the reimbursement of the State of California for the cost of such relocation; and

"2. To provide specifically by law that, whenever, because of the construction of works for flood control, it becomes necessary to relocate a road or highway the United States will relocate said road or highway or will reimburse the State or local agency for such relocation in accordance with the express policy heretofore enunciated by Congress in the Flood Control Acts of June 22, 1936, and June 28, 1938; and

"3. That such legislation further provide that proper and adequate arrangements for such relocation of public highways be made by the United States prior to commencement of construction of any such flood-control works; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States from California; and be it further

"Resolved, That nothing in this resolution contained shall be deemed to have altered the meaning or effect of any statute of the State of California relating to highways, and any and all such statutes shall be deemed to have the same meaning and effect as they had prior to the adoption of this resolution."

OPPOSITION TO FEDERAL LICENSE FOR SALE OF LIQUOR IN DRY STATES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Men's Brotherhood of the First Friends Church, of Emporia, Kans., urging me to oppose the issuing of Federal licenses to sell liquor in dry States. I agree with the First Friends Church that they are justified in protesting against the Government's licensing the sale of liquor in a State like Kansas, which has for years had a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMPORIA, KANS., December 24, 1946.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senator from Kansas,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: At a meeting of the Men's Brotherhood of the First Friends Church, of Emporia, Kans., held this month, it was decided to send you the following request:

That you use your influence against issuing of Federal license to sell any liquor in dry States. It was the opinion of all present that this practice was unfair to us who want our State to be dry.

Thanking you for your consideration of this important matter, we are,

Yours very truly,

MEN'S BROTHERHOOD OF THE FIRST FRIENDS CHURCH, OF EMPORIA, KANS.,
By GERALD W. JONES, Secretary.

(8) Whether or not there should be any limitation on the number of terms a person may serve as President.

Disbursements to pay the expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made.

RULE RELATING TO CLOTURE

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], I submit a resolution amending rule XXII of the Senate, relating to filibusters, which would change the present rule, which provides for a two-thirds majority, so as to require a majority of the full membership of the Senate, and which would also add the words "or motion" after the word "measure" in the provision relating to cloture.

The resolution (S. Res. 30) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate are amended to read as follows:

"If at any time a motion to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure or motion is signed by 16 Senators, and Senator signing such motion shall upon a request for recognition be recognized by the Chair for the purpose of presenting such motion to the Senate, and when such motion is so presented to the Senate the presiding officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by an aye-and-nay vote the question:

"'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of the entire membership of the Senate, then said measure or motion shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, morning business is closed; and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon.

ANTIMONOPOLY PROGRAM

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I feel that there are times when it is particularly desirable for a Senator to explain a bill upon its introduction. I take it that the Chair is now giving me an opportunity to make a brief explanation of two or three bills which I should like to introduce at this time.

First, I feel, in view of the President's very statesmanlike address, in which, according to my belief, at least, he rose above partisan politics to what he considered the welfare of the Nation, that the Republican majority in Congress should meet him on the same plane. I am confident that those of us in the Republican majority will do that very thing. Hence I think it is fitting that I introduce at this time a bill which I introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress and which I at that time labeled the antimonopoly bill of 1947. I think the President is to be particularly complimented for the blows he struck in his speech today against those elements in this country which, by means of concentration of economic and business power in the hands of a privileged few, are, in my judgment, seriously threatening the perpetuation of a private property economy in this country. I feel that controlling monopolies is clearly a nonpartisan issue and one in which I hope the Republican and Democratic Parties will join together in the coming year to the end that we shall do something which will be really effective in checking monopolistic practices for the first time since the Clayton and Sherman Acts were passed.

As I said in a speech on the floor of the Senate when I introduced the bill last year, although both parties have paid lip service to every antitrust and antimonopoly drive, the record is perfectly clear that neither party in our history has really done anything very effective in preventing the serious monopolistic concentration of economic power and wealth which today threatens the free enterprise economy of America.

When I introduced my antimonopoly bill on July 26, 1946, I spoke at some length on the need for the bill. At this time I wish to read a few short excerpts from that speech as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for July 26, 1946:

Mr. President, the most neglected economic problem in American life today is the problem of monopoly and monopolistic practices. While the Federal Government has long been aware of the need for effective action on this problem, it has done little but sit idly by while monopoly has increased its power over American life and created a dire threat to the continuation of our private-property system. What little the Government has done in recent years to combat monopoly has usually been half-hearted, inconsistent, and ill-considered.

Yet the great majority of the American people have a deep-seated antipathy for monopoly and monopolistic practices. Businessmen in particular know that the only hope of the continued existence of our private-property system is the maintenance of competitive private enterprise. They know that further growth of monopoly power or monopolistic practices is the greatest threat to our present economic system. This viewpoint is shared by American agriculture, which has long been suffering the effects of the monopolistic practices of the railroads and the manufacturers of farm machinery. It is shared by American labor, which has too often been forced out on strike by monopolistic companies which are in such a strong economic position that they have little or nothing to lose by a prolonged period of inactivity.

In recent years the campaign platforms of both the Republican and Democratic Parties have outlined a strong position against monopoly. In 1936, for example, the Republican platform made the following statement:

"A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable. It menaces and, if continued, will utterly destroy constitutional government and the liberty of the citizen.

"We favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal laws against monopolies and trusts and their officials, and we demand the enactment of such additional legislation as is necessary to make it impossible for private monopoly to exist in the United States."

The Democratic platform statement set forth the following antimonopoly plank:

"Monopolies and the concentration of economic power, the creation of Republican rule and privilege, continue to be the master of the producer, the exploiter of the consumer, and the enemy of the independent operator. This is a problem challenging the unceasing effort of untrammeled public officials in every branch of the Government. We pledge vigorously and fearlessly to enforce the criminal and civil provisions of the existing antitrust laws, and to the extent that their effectiveness has been weakened by new corporate devices or judicial construction, we propose by law to restore their efficacy in stamping out monopolistic practices and the concentration of economic power."

Mr. President, one might think that with such apparent agreement between the two major parties, the path to effective action would have been short and easy, and that immediately following the 1936 election, a vigorous antimonopoly program would have been developed. After the election, however, practically all that happened was that a new committee was set up to study the problem—the Temporary National Economic Committee.

The hearings, reports, and recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee, under the brilliant leadership of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], represent a landmark in the history of congressional investigations. Nevertheless, the recommendations of the TNEC were ignored by the Congress. Two years of intensive work yielded 31 volumes of hearings and 43 monographs, but resulted in nothing but inaction on the part of the Congress in attempting to deal with the monopoly problem.

During the war, in the interests of expediting war production, Government turned to big business, and ignored for the most part the antitrust laws. As a result of receiving the bulk of the new war plants and of war contracts for both production and research, monopolistic enterprises emerged from the war stronger than ever before in the history of our country.

As soon as the war was over, the monopoly problem won official recognition in the first Presidential message to Congress on the state of the Union. In his message of January 14, 1946, President Truman told the Congress that we must have a coordinated over-all antimonopoly policy. The President stated that we must have such a policy—but he did not propose such a policy. To my knowledge, neither he nor any other official of the Administration has yet mapped out such a policy.

However, the Government's activities since the end of the war have had a very definite effect upon the concentration of economic power—the effect of accelerating the trend toward increased concentration. I am referring specifically to what has happened in the disposal of Government-owned war plants. For example, more than one-third of all Government war plants have been disposed of to 22 companies, all of which are among the largest in the United States. Two-thirds of all these plants have gone to a group of big companies who represent only four-tenths of 1 percent of all the manufacturing enterprises in the country.

On July 14, 1946, the able and distinguished chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], presented to the Senate a report entitled "Economic Concentration and World War II." This report summarized all the available statistics on the growing concentration of economic power that took place during World War II. It pointed out that in 1939 firms with over 1,000 employees accounted for 36 percent of the total pay roll for all American trade and industry; by 1943 this figure had risen to 53 percent. It was pointed out that by the end of 1945 the rate of mergers and acquisitions, particularly in manufacturing industries, was higher than at any time in the previous decade and a half.

The report from which I have quoted was prepared for the Senate Small Business Committee by the Smaller War Plants Corporation, which has now been transferred to the Department of Commerce. It is interesting to note that in submitting this report the SWPC recommended no specific program for doing anything about the concentration of economic power.

Mr. President, we have had too much empty talk on this vital matter.

The time has come for action.

The time has come for all true believers in economic and political freedom to join together behind a specific legislative program designed to cope with the entire problem of monopoly and monopolistic practices.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I have sent to the desk a new measure entitled "The Antimonopoly Act of 1947." This measure represents the first comprehensive antimonopoly measure to be submitted to the Congress since the Sherman antitrust law was enacted in the last days of the nineteenth century.

Mr. President, I reintroduce this bill not only on behalf of myself but also on behalf of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR]. A reading of the bill will show that it covers in detail the points which the President made in the antimonopoly section of his address of today. In fact, the speech which I delivered on this bill in the Senate on July 26, 1946, discusses in detail the serious situation of monopolistic control of the economy of this country which the President so ably decried in his message today.

Hence I am very pleased to send to the desk for reintroduction the antimonopoly bill of 1947 as I proposed it in the last session of Congress. We intend to offer certain revisions of this bill from time to time as we make further study of this vital problem. However, we think it important that the proper committee proceed at this time on this bill.

The bill (S. 72) to establish a consistent and coordinated antimonopoly program, prevent or eliminate monopoly and monopolistic practices, and protect the public interest, wherever necessary, through effective methods of public control over monopoly and monopolistic practices, introduced by Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. LANGER, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. KILGORE, and Mr. YOUNG), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEDIATION OF LABOR DISPUTES

Mr. MORSE. I also, Mr. President, introduce a bill which proposes to create an independent Federal mediation, conciliation, and arbitration tribunal. It will be found, as I explained to a conference of Republicans the other day, that it is very similar to title I of the Ball-Taft-Smith labor bill. It limits itself, however, to title I of that bill. It has this very important and, I think, vital difference from the Ball-Taft-Smith bill in that it proposes that any mediation, conciliation, and arbitration tribunal which may be set up by the Federal Government shall be independent of the Department of Labor. That principle of complete separation from the Department of Labor was contained in the substitute for the Case bill which some of us proposed at the last session of Congress. Incidentally, this proposal to make the Board independent of the Department of Labor received a majority vote in the Committee on Education and Labor. I think the record will show that at that time some of those who now favor the Ball-Taft-Smith bill voted with us for the establishment of an independent tribunal. I know of no change that has occurred since the introduction of the bill of last year that would now justify the setting up of such a tribunal within the Department of Labor. I do not want the Department of Labor to have even bookkeeping jurisdiction over such a Board. I am for a Federal mediation, conciliation, and arbitration tribunal. I hope we can reach a common ground of understanding on it. At least I hope we can eliminate the area of disagreement which now exists between and among some of us as to this very important labor reform. However, I wish to say that in my judgment there is no more reason for setting up such a tribunal within the Department of Labor than there is for setting it up within the Department of Commerce or any other agency of government. I think that it is very important that we make clear to the business interests of the country and to the public generally, as well as to labor, that if we are to make a fair approach to the peaceful settlement of labor disputes, we must have a tribunal in which all parties have complete confidence. Industry, labor, and the public wish to know that the tribunal which is to render the decisions and provide the mediation, conciliation, and arbitration services does not even have to labor under the suspicion that it is partisan in its point of view. I wish to point out again, as I did last year before the Committee on Education and Labor, that any such tribunal set up in the Department of Labor necessarily in the minds of many people, and I think rightly so, will be considered a partisan tribunal. Many people will look upon it as a child of that division of the executive branch of Government one duty of which is, as I see it, to be a partisan advocate of the best but selfish interests of labor. Hence I do not desire to vote for setting up of such a tribunal within the Department of Labor. I wish to see it independent of the Department of Labor in all respects. I wish to see it take on those quasi-judicial characteristics which I think are so essential if we are going to have the voluntary principles of collective bargaining, mediation, conciliation, and arbitration work effectively through such a tribunal.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I think there have been some changes in the policies of the Department of Labor, since we last considered this situation or problem, which more than ever justify an independent mediation, arbitration, and conciliation tribunal. Therefore I hope that in the consideration of the Ball-Taft-Smith proposal and the one which I now offer, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare will make an investigation into the operation and policies of the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor as well as other divisions of the Department of Labor. I am very desirous of knowing first hand what some of the administrative and hiring policies of the Conciliation Service are. I wish to know something more about the actual record of that division than just to read a statistical report on what it claims it is accomplishing. I wish to know to what extent it is true that some fine public servants of unquestioned ability have been removed from the Conciliation Service staff in order that those responsible for the selection of personnel of that Service could put on the roll some of their personal selectees, many of whom formerly were on the staff of the War Labor Board. It has been alleged to me that some very able conciliators not protected by civil service have been displaced in the Conciliation Service by men who are in no way better qualified to do the work. It is charged that a group of career men taken from the War Labor Board have received favored treatment. I think that the matter needs to be gone into when we consider this whole question as to where and under what jurisdiction we shall place the work and the duties of any proposed conciliation, mediation, and arbitration tribunal such as is proposed in the Ball-Taft-Smith bill. I think that conciliators, even though they do not have civil-service status, should not be fired simply because the officials in the Department of Labor seem to have a preference for some of the staff members of the War Labor Board. I shall be glad to discuss this matter in more detail when it reaches the committee for consideration.

Let me make perfectly clear that not only do I have no opposition to the objective of title I of the Ball-Taft-Smith bill, save and except its provision that the tribunal shall be a part of the Department of Labor, but I shall again work on the committee for the establishment of a Federal tribunal which has assigned to it the duties and objectives of title I of the Ball-Taft-Smith bill.

The bill (S. 73) to provide additional facilities for the mediation of labor disputes, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I next introduce and send to the desk a bill in regard to the benefits to accrue to those who served this Government in the war, but who were not naturalized citizens at the time. It is a reintroduction of a previous bill.

The bill (S. 74) to amend title III of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, with respect to the naturalization of persons who have served with the armed forces of the United States in overseas theaters, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RADIOTELEGRAPH OPERATORS IN THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. MORSE. I also send to the desk and introduce a bill on interstate commerce.

The bill (S. 75) to amend the definition of vessels of the United States and officers so as to include within the term "officers" chief radiotelegraph operator and assistant radiotelegraph operator, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CONTINUATION OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. MORSE. I also send to the desk and introduce a bill to provide for the continuation of workmen's compensation in certain cases, subject to the act of February 15, 1934.

The bill (S. 76) to provide continuation of workmen's compensation in certain cases subject to the act of February 15, 1934, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

EXTENSION OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. MORSE. I also introduce and send to the desk a bill to provide eligibility for retirement under the Civil Service Act of May 29, 1930, in the case of certain employees of the United States Employment Service with less than 5 years of service as Federal employees.

The bill (S. 77) to provide eligibility for retirement under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, in the case of certain employees of the United States Employment Service with less than 5 years of service as Federal employees, introduced by Mr. MORSE, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

EXAMINATION AND SURVEY OF TWO MILE CREEK, OREG.

Mr. MORSE. I also introduce and send to the desk a bill to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of Two Mile Creek, Oreg., for the purpose of determining what action should be taken to control floods on such creek.

The bill (S. 78) to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of Two Mile Creek, Oreg., for the purpose of determining what action should be taken to control floods of such creek and to make it adequately drain the area through which it flows, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION RELATING TO TERMS OF OFFICE OF PRESIDENT

Mr. MORSE. I also send to the desk and introduce a joint resolution which deals with an amendment to the Constitution. It is a reintroduction of a joint resolution which I introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress. It proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President of the United States. In substance it limits any President to two terms, in whole or in part.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 9) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS BY SENATORS ON SOURCES OF INCOME

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I also introduce and send to the desk two resolutions which I think are very important. They relate to a bill which I introduced for myself and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR]. Not only in the light of happenings while we were in session during the Seventy-ninth Congress, but also in light of happenings since the adjournment of that Congress, we owe to the people of the country the duty of giving serious consideration to these resolutions. I refer to my resolutions which would require that the members of the Senate file with the Secretary of the Senate a complete statement of their income and the sources of such income, because I think we need to adopt such a rule of the Senate in order to demonstrate to the people of the United States what I am satisfied is the fact, namely, that the overwhelming majority of the Members, practically without exception, do not engage in questionable financial transactions. Nevertheless from time to time there are exceptions in that some public officials do not always live up to their public trust. In any human institution we find exceptions and therefore I think we should surround the Senate and provide the people of the country with such a protection from misconduct on the part of Senators as I offer in these resolutions. We must all agree that those who do engage in questionable financial transactions disqualify themselves for service in the Senate. I think the record of such matters should be an open book. Hence I renew the measure which I introduced in the last session of Congress to provide for the requirement that our income and the sources of our income be filed with the Secretary of the Senate subject to public knowledge and information. I do not propose this as a discrimination against the wealthy. However, I think the public is entitled also to study and analyze our voting records against the background of our economic interests.

The resolution (S. Res. 31) submitted by Mr. MORSE was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That the standing rules of the Senate are hereby amended by adding the following new rule:

"RULE NO. XLI

"Every Member of the United States Senate shall, not later than 30 days following the date of agreement to this resolution, and on the 2d day of January of each year thereafter, file with the Secretary of the Senate a report containing a full and complete statement of—

"(1) The amount and sources of all income received by such Member during the preceding year, including all fees, salaries, income from trusts or estates and dividends received or credited to his account, and, if such income is derived from a law firm or partnership, the names of the clients of such firm or partnership from whom fees were received; and

"(2) All dealings in securities or commodities by such Member, or by any person acting on behalf of, or pursuant to the direction of, such Member during the preceding year."

SEC. 2. As used in this resolution—

(1) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, trust, estate, association, corporation, or society.

(2) The term "security" means security as defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 77b).

(3) The term "commodity" means commodity as defined in section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 2).

(4) The term "dealings in securities or commodities" means any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, disposition, or other transaction involving any security or commodity.

The resolution (S. Res. 33) submitted by Mr. MORSE was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That every Member of the United States Senate shall, not later than 30 days following the date of agreement to this resolution, and on the 2d day of January of each year thereafter, file with the Secretary of the Senate a report containing a full and complete statement of—

(1) the amount and sources of all income received by such Member during the preceding year, including all fees, salaries, income from trusts or estates, and dividends received or credited to his account, and, if such income is derived from a law firm or partnership, the names of the clients of such firm or partnership from whom fees were received; and

(2) all dealings in securities or commodities by such Member, or by any person acting on behalf of, or pursuant to the direction of, such Member during the preceding year.

SEC. 2. As used in this resolution—

(1) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, trust, estate, association, corporation, or society.

(2) The term "security" means security as defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 77b).

(3) The term "commodity" means commodity as defined in section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 2).

(4) The term "dealings in securities or commodities" means any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, disposition, or other transaction involving any security or commodity.

COURT-MARTIAL SYSTEMS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. MORSE. On behalf of myself and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], I submit a resolution to the effect that a special committee to be composed of seven Senators, four from the Committee on Armed Services and three from the Senate Judiciary Committee, shall carry out what I endeavored so strenuously during the Seventy-ninth Congress to have that Congress do, namely, conduct a thorough investigation into the courts-martial system of the Army and the Navy, including its penalties, its incarceration places, and its methods of penal treatment.

The resolution (S. Res. 34), submitted by Mr. MORSE for himself and Mr. YOUNG, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee to be composed of seven Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, four from the Committee on Armed Services and three from the Senate Judiciary Committee, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the operation of the courts-martial systems of the Army and Navy, and of the prisons, jails, and places of incarceration of Army and Navy prisoners with particular emphasis on (1) alleged miscarriages of justice arising out of the operation of such systems and places of incarceration; (2) the question of whether or not punishments meted under such systems are unduly excessive; (3) the alleged lack of uniformity in punishments meted under such systems; (4) the question of whether or not present methods of holding courts martial are desirable and proper; and (5) any desirable improvements in or modifications of courts-martial systems and places of incarceration or the administration thereof. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Eightieth Congress, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

AMENDMENT OF RULE GIVING PRIORITY TO PRESENTATION AND CONSIDERATION OF CLOTURE MOTIONS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], I submit a resolution which might be interpreted as a companion resolution to that previously offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] dealing with the filibuster practice of the Senate. However, my resolution differs in one important respect from his in that my resolution also seeks to amend and modify rule III of the Senate. I think this has to be done before we can ever have an effective antifilibuster rule in the Senate. I also propose to amend rule XXII of the Senate, in that I provide for a majority vote on the adoption of a cloture petition signed by 16 Members of the Senate, with the understanding that after the adoption of such a petition any Member of the Senate may be allowed 3 hours to discuss the issue pending before the Senate. Further he may be privileged to farm out any or all of his 3-hour allotment to other Senators. The important point is that my resolution does fix a terminal date for the ending of debate in the Senate, which is so essential if we are to guarantee majority rule at all times in the Senate of the United States.

The resolution (S. Res. 32), submitted by Mr. MORSE on behalf of himself and Mr. TAYLOR, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That rule III of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended to read as follows:

"RULE III

"COMMENCEMENT OF DAILY SESSIONS

"1. The Presiding Officer having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall be read, and any mistake made in the entries corrected. The reading of the Journal shall not be suspended unless by unanimous consent; and when any motion shall be made to amend or correct the same, it shall be deemed a privileged question, and proceeded with until disposed of, except that it shall be displaced by the action of the Presiding Officer in submitting to the Senate for an aye-and-nay vote any question under rule XXII. If the question submitted under rule XXII is decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting, the motion to amend or correct the Journal shall remain displaced until the measure which becomes the unfinished business under rule XXII is disposed of.

"2. A quorum shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn."

SEC. 2. That part of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate relating to cloture (as shown on p. 28 of the Senate Manual, 1945) is amended to read as follows:

"If at any time a motion to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure is signed by 16 Senators, any Senator signing such motion shall upon a request for recognition be recognized by the Chair for the purpose of presenting such motion to the Senate, and when such motion is so presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by an aye-and-nay vote the question:

" 'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting, then said measure shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Thereafter each Senator shall be entitled to speak in his own right on the pending measure, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same for an aggregate period of not more than 3 hours. Any Senator may yield to any other Senator the unexpired portion, or any part thereof, of the aggregate period of time which he is entitled to speak; and the Senator to whom he so yields may speak for the time so yielded, in addition to any period of time which he is entitled to speak in his own right. It shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate. Notwithstanding the provisions of rule III, the reading of the Journal of the preceding day shall be dispensed with on days when the Senate is proceeding under the provisions of this paragraph.

"In any case in which a motion is filed under the provisions of this paragraph while a motion is pending under rule III to amend or correct the Journal of a preceding day, the term 'pending measure,' as used in the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, shall mean the measure which would be the pending measure if the Journal of all preceding days were approved."

TERMINATION OF PORTAL-TO-PORTAL WAGES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, a few moments ago I introduced a bill which I believe would end the portal-to-portal pay controversy. The title of the bill reads "To exempt employers from liability for portal-to-portal wages in certain cases, and for other purposes."

It has become completely obvious in the last few weeks that it is absolutely urgent that the Congress promptly enact legislation which will preserve the very foundations of American industry by relieving it of the many billion dollars of portal-to-portal pay suits which have recently been filed. It is up to the Congress, I believe, definitively to indicate to the Supreme Court Congress' intent in this matter in order that the Court might find proper legal ground for reversing the stand which it has taken heretofore, which has resulted in the disastrous suits, amounting now to billions.

My bill is divided into three sections.

The first section is intended effectively to bar all pending so-called portal-to-portal cases which have been recently instituted in the courts, based upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the Mt. Clemens case.

Section 2 is self-explanatory. It provides simply that employers who, in good faith, find themselves liable under the act to the harsh penalties properly intended for malefactors, will hereafter be permitted a fairer deal by being relieved of liability for punitive damages.

The third section of the bill is intended to permit in proper cases the compromise and settlement out of court of wage claims under the Fair Labor Standards Act in amounts less than provided by the act. I believe that this is necessary in view of the 1942 decision (Rigopoulos et al. v. Kervan, 47 Fed. Supp. 576) in which the court stated that the act forbids compromise settlements in amounts less than provided by the act.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 70) to exempt employers from liability for portal-to-portal wages in certain cases, and for other purposes, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) As used in this section, the term 'work week' shall include only the time during which an employee is engaged in productive work, unless such time is compensable in pursuance of an agreement between an employer and his employee or employees or is considered compensable working time according to established custom in the industry or part thereof involved; and hereafter no action for the recovery of wages, penalties, or other damages (actual, liquidated, or exemplary) shall be instituted or continued under this act in any court by reason of any time spent by such employee in other than productive work."

SEC. 2. The first sentence of section 16 (b) of such act is hereby amended by striking the period at the end thereof, inserting a comma and adding the following: "Provided, however, That any employer, who shows by a preponderance of the evidence that any error made by him with respect to payment of wages for time worked or with respect to his coverage under this act was a bona fide error made in good faith, shall not be liable to the employee or employees for liquidated damages."

SEC. 3. Section 16 (b) of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit an employee from giving his employer a valid release of his rights to liquidated damages accrued under this act against such employer in consideration of receiving any payment of liquidated damages in an amount less than that provided by this act."

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE SENATE

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution which I introduced a few moments ago be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) relating to employees of Senators and Senate standing committees was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) notwithstanding the provisions of section 202 (h) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946—

(1) The positions and funds allocated on January 1, 1947, to the chairman of any standing committee of the Senate existing on such date shall be continued through January 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by such chairman; except that in the case of any such chairman who has died or was not reelected, committee employees shall be continued on the pay rolls of the Senate through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Secretary of the Senate, and such employees shall perform such duties as the Secretary of the Senate shall prescribe.

(2) Clerks and other employees of any Senator who was a Member of the Senate on January 1, 1947, but who was not a chairman of any standing committee existing on January 1, 1947, and who was not reelected, shall be continued on the rolls of the Senate through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Secretary of the Senate; and such employees shall perform such duties as the Secretary of the Senate shall prescribe.

(3) The appropriations for the compensation of employees of Senators and of committee employees of standing committees of the Senate contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1947, shall be available for the compensation of employees specified in paragraphs (1) and (2).

(b) The proviso under the caption "Senate" in the First Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1947, approved August 8, 1946, is hereby repealed, effective as of August 8, 1946.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I should like briefly to explain the proposed joint resolution for just a moment, and then to have it acted upon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HATCH Did the Senator indicate he would ask that it be considered at this time?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Perhaps I should suggest the absence of a quorum, if that is to be done. I do not know whether there is any objection or not.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not think there is. I conferred with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the ranking members of the Committee on Appropriations, and they have no objection. I shall explain the joint resolution, and if the Senator then thinks there would be objection, I shall not press it.

Mr. HATCH. Very well.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Reorganization Act provided for carrying on the staffs of all existing committees until January 31, 1947. Shortly after that act was passed, a supplemental appropriation bill was enacted which provided "that positions and funds now allocated to any Senator or to any standing-committee chairman shall be continued until March 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by the Senator or the chairman."

The effect of this proviso would be to continue on the pay roll of the Senate until March 31, 1947, all committee employees of existing standing committees, and all employees of individual Senators in office on August 8, 1946, unless otherwise directed by the chairmen of such committees or the individual Senator, as the case might be. This would merely mean at this stage that the staffs of all the old committees, even though the committees were not in existence, would continue to March 31, 1947, the staff of the Committee on Appropriations would continue to June 30, 1947, and the staffs of individual Senators who had been defeated or who had died would continue to March 31, 1947.

The financial clerk of the Senate indicates that the appropriations heretofore made will not stand the load of the new committee staffs and the old committee staffs. Of course, it is not efficient to continue the staffs of Senators who are deceased or who have been defeated, or the staffs of committees which are no longer in existence. In many cases the chairmen are no longer Members of the Senate.

The joint resolution would put the matter back on the Reorganization Act basis. It is a more liberal provision than has ever existed before, because it would continue everyone to January 31, it would give the new committees time to reorganize, and the members of the old staffs an opportunity to look for new jobs. The only bad feature about it is that it would give the staffs of Senators who are not here, either because they were defeated or because of death, no place to hang their hats, so to speak, in the meantime, and no duties to perform.

Mr. President, this is merely an efficiency measure, an economy measure, and I am sure it is perfectly sound. However, I do not desire to have anyone think there is any attempt to put anything over, and I should much rather have it referred to a committee, if there is any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL REPRESENTATION FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I introduce the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which would make it possible for the people of the District of Columbia to participate with their fellow Americans in the government of our country. The resolution differs from that introduced by me in the Seventy-ninth Congress only so far as it includes an explanatory preamble as a basis for the action sought.

The amendment which is proposed to be added to the Constitution of the United States is identical with that introduced in the last Congress, and reads as follows:

ARTICLE —

The Congress shall have power to provide that there shall be in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President Members elected by the people of the District constituting the seat of the Government of the United States, in such numbers and with such powers as the Congress shall determine. All legislation hereunder shall be subject to amendment and repeal.

This proposal is an enabling provision to be added to the Constitution which will permit the application, in the case of the people of the District of Columbia, of the fundamental principles of our form of government. I hold that all Americans, wherever they reside in our country, should possess the right and privilege of participating in the legislation of the Nation through legislators of their own choosing. I also hold that all such Americans are justly entitled to participate through their duly chosen electors in the election of the President and Vice President of the United States.

I should like to reiterate what I said on January 10, 1945, in introducing the similar joint resolution.

With the single exception of those Americans permanently residing in the District of Columbia, the way is open for all to participate. However, the peculiar situation as regards the voteless and unrepresented people of the District of Columbia is that the Congress, which under the Constitution has the broad power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over the seat of the government, lacks the power to correct this fundamental defect. The people of the District of Columbia labor under serious handicap and humiliation through being denied the exercise of these fundamental American rights.

The rank injustice to these fellow Americans residing in the District of Columbia is pointedly emphasized by the plight of the fighting men from the District of Columbia in the late war. In the last Presidential election they continued voteless while their comrades-in-arms from the States were permitted to vote by absentee ballot. I called the attention of the Senate, while the soldier vote bill was under consideration, to the fact that "fighting side by side with the men from your State and mine are the fighting men from the voteless and unrepresented District of Columbia. They are the men who volunteered or were drafted, just like the boys from your State and mine. They are in the thick of the fight in all theaters of the war. They are shedding their blood and giving their all for their country and its democratic institutions, in which they do not fully share."

In this connection I should like to quote from an election day statement published in The Washington Star, which showed that the District of Columbia had contributed to the armed forces in World War II more men and women than each of 14 States:

Complete figures are still unavailable covering the service of the voteless and unrepresented people of the District of Columbia in the armed forces in World War II. To the Army the District contributed a total of 68,401 men and women, to the Navy personnel 24,881, to the Marine Corps 3,800 and to the Coast Guard 1,320. This makes an estimated grand total of 98,402 men and women from the District of Columbia in all branches of the service. This was greater than any of 14 States: Maine, 92,071; Rhode Island, 84,597; Utah, 69,324; New Mexico, 60,478; Arizona, 59,633; Montana, 58,665; South Dakota, 57,686; North Dakota, 56,985; Idaho, 56,982; New Hampshire, 52,356; Vermont, 35,019; Delaware, 30,688; Wyoming, 28,520, and Nevada, 16,334. The number of those from the District of Columbia exceeded the combined number furnished by Vermont, Delaware, and Wyoming.

The District contributed to the Marine Corps more men and women than any of 15 States: Nebraska, Maine, Montana, Utah, Rhode Island, Idaho, Arizona, New Hampshire, New Mexico, South Dakota, North Dakota, Vermont, Delaware, Wyoming, and Nevada. The number of those from the District exceeded the combined number furnished by Vermont, Delaware, Wyoming, and Nevada.

The most complete figures available regarding casualties among those serving from the District are for service in the Army. A War Department release of June 27, 1946, gave a consolidated list of Army dead and missing in World War II, disclosing that the District of Columbia, where 3,029 failed to return, had the highest rate of dead and missing, with 5.05 percent. Among the States, Maryland, with 2.20 percent, had the lowest rate. Of the Virginians who went into the Army, 3.02 percent failed to return. For the Nation as a whole the dead and missing rate was 2.98 percent.

Mr. President, enactment of this amendment would not in the slightest detract from the power of Congress over the Federal District. It would, however, so broaden the power of Congress as to enable it to correct this grievous wrong, action for which the District citizens have for half a century petitioned the Congress.

The amendment would merely empower Congress to provide national representation for the permanent residents of the District of Columbia, leaving the details of such representation to be worked out by the Congress. Full power is given to Congress either to withdraw or modify the form of such representation as may be provided by subsequent legislation.

These people of the District of Columbia, I am qualified to testify, are fine, patriotic, public-spirited Americans. They are the equals of the best among those in the States who sent us here to Congress. It has always been a source of mortification and shame when I reflect that in actual practice these fine Americans are politically only the subjects of the United States, and by no means the political equals of the citizens of the States. It is a condition that is absolutely wrong and does not make sense. Under the law they are recognized fully as the equals of the people in the States, so far as bearing all the burdens of American citizenship which fall alike on all citizens of the Republic are concerned. While they are denied the vote and representation in the councils of our Nation, they are required to pay national taxes, and to fight, bleed and die in the service of their country.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SENATOR VANDENBERG AND SENATOR McKELLAR

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I should like personally to congratulate the President pro tempore the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I know that not only his party, which is of course my party, but the country, has confidence in him, and that he will carry on in the finest traditions of the Senate.

I also wish to express my appreciation to his distinguished predecessor as President pro tempore the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who so graciously withdrew his nomination, and moved the unanimous election of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to the position he now occupies. That gesture omens well for future cooperation of Senators on both sides of the aisle in vital matters.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it had been my intention to discuss very briefly the resolution that is pending. Is it expected to proceed with that resolution now? I will ask the majority leader if he proposes to go ahead with the resolution on committees.

Mr. WHITE. It has been agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the matter to which I desired to address my remarks has already been agreed to, I see no use in delaying the Senate longer.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, so far as I know, there is no other business immediately pending, to be brought before the Senate. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. WHITE. I withhold it.

Mr. MURRAY. Is my understanding correct that a report on the minority membership of the committees is to be submitted this afternoon? I understand it is being prepared and it is the intention to have it acted on this afternoon.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, that is all so indefinite, and I think the understanding was so general that we would adjourn this afternoon that I must insist upon my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, January 8, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 6, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father of mankind, we praise Thee that Thou dost stoop to our needs and art a shield when temptation is nigh. Make plain and open for us the royal pathway of truth, never forsaking it for expediency or compromise. Clothed with the insignia of a great office, forbid that we should be untrue to our best selves. Build in the citizens of our country, with its commerce, its schools, its homes, the golden rules of the blessed beatitudes of our Master. Be unto all of us, O God, more than a clause in a creed; bless us with a personal relationship that assures us that Thou art all-loving and all-wise as well as all-mighty.

Bless our chosen Speaker, the leaders and Members, and keep all minds free from worry and all hearts free from hate. As we look into the folds of the future help us to heed these immortal words:

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!"

In Christ's name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 3, 1947, was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Members of the Congress, I have the great pleasure and high privilege of presenting to you the President of the United States.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, Members of the Congress of the United States: It looks as though a good many of you have moved over to the left since I was here last. [Laughter and applause.]

I come before you today to report on the state of the Union and, in the words of the Constitution, to recommend such measures as I judge necessary and expedient.

I come also to welcome you as you take up your duties and to discuss with you the manner in which you and I should fulfill our obligations to the American people during the next 2 years.

The power to mold the future of this Nation lies in our hands—yours and mine, joined together.

If in this year, and in the next, we can find the right course to take as each issue arises, and if, in spite of all difficulties, we have the courage and the resolution to take that course, then we shall achieve a state of well-being for our people without precedent in history. And if we continue to work with the other nations of the world earnestly, patiently, and wisely, we can—granting a will for peace on the part of our neighbors—make a lasting peace for the world.

But, if we are to realize these ends, the Congress and the President, during the next 2 years, must work together. It is not unusual in our history that the majority of the Congress represents a party in opposition to the President's party. I am the twentieth President of the United States who, at some time during his term of office, has found his own party to be in the minority in one or both Houses of the Congress.

I realize that on some matters the Congress and the President may have honest differences of opinion. Partisan differences, however, did not cause material disagreements as to the conduct of the war. Nor, in the conduct of our international relations, during and since the war, have such partisan differences been material.

On some domestic issues we may, and probably shall, disagree. That in itself is not to be feared. It is inherent in our form of government. But there are ways of disagreeing; men who differ can still work together sincerely for the common good. We shall be risking the Nation's safety and destroying our opportunities for progress if we do not settle any disagreements in this spirit, without thought of partisan advantage.

GENERAL DOMESTIC ECONOMY

As the year 1947 begins, the state of our national economy presents great opportunities for all. We have virtually full employment. Our national production of goods and services is 50 percent higher than in any year prior to the war emergency. The national income in 1946 was higher than in any peacetime year. Our food production is greater than it has ever been. During the last 5 years, our productive facilities have been expanded in almost every field. The American standard of living is higher now than ever before, and when the housing shortage can be overcome, it will be even higher.

During the past few months we have removed at a rapid rate the emergency controls that the Federal Government had to exercise during the war. The remaining controls will be retained only so long as they are needed to protect the public. Private enterprise must be given the greatest possible freedom to continue the expansion of our economy. [Applause.]

In my proclamation of December 31, 1946, I announced the termination of hostilities. This automatically ended certain temporary legislation and certain Executive powers.

Two groups of temporary laws still remain: The first are those which by congressional mandate are to last during the emergency; the second are those which are to continue until the termination of the war.

I shall submit to the Congress recommendations for the repeal of certain of the statutes which by their terms continue for the duration of the emergency. I shall at the same time recommend that others within this classification be extended until the state of war has been ended by treaty or by legislative action. As to those statutes which continue until the state of war has been terminated, I urge that the Congress promptly consider each statute individually, and repeal such emergency legislation where advisable.

Now that nearly all wartime controls have been removed the operation of our industrial system depends to a greater extent on the decisions of businessmen, farmers, and workers. These decisions must be wisely made with genuine concern for the public welfare. The welfare of businessmen, farmers, and workers depends upon the economic well-being of those who buy their products.

An important present source of danger to our economy is the possibility that prices might be raised to such an extent that the consuming public could not purchase the tremendous volume of goods and services which will be produced in 1947.

We all know that recent price increases have denied to many of our workers much of the value of recent wage increases. Farmers have found that a large part of their increased income has been absorbed by increased prices. While some of our people have received raises in income which exceed price increases the great majority have not. Those persons who live on modest fixed incomes—retired persons living on pensions, for example, and workers whose incomes are relatively inflexible, such as teachers and other civil servants—have suffered hardship.

In the effort to bring about a sound and equitable price structure each group of our population has its own responsibilities.

It is up to industry not only to hold the line on existing prices but to make reductions whenever profits justify such action.

It is up to labor to refrain from pressing for unjustified wage increases that will force increases in the price level.

And it is up to Government to do everything in its power to encourage high-volume production, for that is what makes possible good wages, low prices, and reasonable profits.

In a few days there will be submitted to the Congress the economic report of the President, and also the Budget message. Those messages will contain many recommendations. Today I shall outline five major economic policies which I believe the Government should pursue during 1947. These policies are designed to meet our immediate needs and, at the same time, to provide for the long-range welfare of our free-enterprise system:

First. Promotion of greater harmony between labor and management.

Second. Restriction of monopoly and unfair business practices; assistance to small business; and the promotion of the free competitive system of private enterprise.

Third. Continuation of an aggressive program of home construction.

Fourth. The balancing of the budget in the next fiscal year, [applause] and the achieving of a substantial surplus to be applied to the reduction of the public debt.

Fifth. Protection of a fair level of return to farmers in postwar agriculture.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

The year just past—like the year after the First World War—was marred by labor-management strife.

Despite this outbreak of economic warfare in 1946, we are today producing goods and services in record volume. Nevertheless, it is essential to improve the methods for reaching agreement between labor and management and to reduce the number of strikes and lock-outs.

We must not, however, adopt punitive legislation. We must not, in order to punish a few labor leaders, pass vindictive laws which will restrict the proper rights of the rank and file of labor. We must not, under the stress of emotion, endanger our American freedoms by taking ill-considered action which will lead to results not anticipated or desired.

We must remember, in reviewing the record of disputes in 1946, that management shares with labor the responsibility for failure to reach agreements which would have averted strikes. For that reason, we must realize that industrial peace cannot be achieved merely by laws directed against labor unions.

During the last decade and a half, we have established a national labor policy in this country based upon free collective bargaining as the process for determining wages and working conditions.

This is still the national policy.

It should continue to be the national policy. [Applause.]

But as yet, not all of us have learned what it means to bargain freely and fairly. Nor have all of us learned to carry the mutual responsibilities that accompany the right to bargain. There have been abuses and harmful practices which limit the effectiveness of our system of collective bargaining. Furthermore, we have lacked sufficient governmental machinery to aid labor and management in resolving differences.

Certain labor-management problems need attention at once and certain others, by reason of their complexity, need exhaustive investigation and study.

We should enact legislation to correct certain abuses and to provide additional governmental assistance in bargaining. But we should also concern ourselves with the basic causes of labor-management difficulties.

In the light of these considerations, I propose to you and urge your cooperation in effecting the following four-point program to reduce industrial strife:

Point No. 1 is the early enactment of legislation to prevent certain unjustifiable practices.

First, under this point, are jurisdictional strikes. [Applause.] In such strikes the public and the employer are innocent bystanders who are injured by a collision between rival unions. This type of dispute hurts production, industry, and the public—and labor itself. I consider jurisdictional strikes indefensible.

The National Labor Relations Act provides procedures for determining which union represents the employees of a particular employer. In some jurisdictional disputes, however, minority unions strike to compel employers to deal with them despite a legal duty to bargain with the majority union. Strikes to compel an employer to violate the law are inexcusable. Legislation to prevent such strikes is clearly desirable.

Another form of interunion disagreement is the jurisdictional strike involving the question of which labor union is entitled to perform a particular task. When rival unions are unable to settle such disputes themselves, provision must be made for peaceful and binding determination of the issues.

A second unjustifiable practice is the secondary boycott, when used to further jurisdictional disputes or to compel employers to violate the National Labor Relations Act.

Not all secondary boycotts are unjustified. We must judge them on the basis of their objectives. For example, boycotts intended to protect wage rates and working conditions should be distinguished from those in furtherance of jurisdictional disputes. The structure of industry sometimes requires unions, as a matter of self-preservation, to extend the conflict beyond a particular employer. There should be no blanket prohibition against boycotts. The appropriate goal is legislation which prohibits secondary boycotts in pursuance of unjustifiable objectives, but does not impair the union's right to preserve its own existence and the gains made in genuine collective bargaining.

A third practice that should be corrected is the use of economic force, by either labor or management, to decide issues arising out of the interpretation of existing contracts.

Collective bargaining agreements, like other contracts, should be faithfully adhered to by both parties. [Applause.] In the most enlightened union-management relationships, disputes over the interpretation of contract terms are settled peacefully by negotiation or arbitration. Legislation should be enacted to provide machinery whereby unsettled disputes concerning the interpretation of an existing agreement may be referred by either party to final and binding arbitration.

Point No. 2 is the extension of the facilities within the Department of Labor for assisting collective bargaining.

One of our difficulties in avoiding labor strife arises from a lack of order in the collective-bargaining process. The parties often do not have a clear understanding of their responsibility for settling disputes through their own negotiations. We constantly see instances where labor or management resorts to economic force without exhausting the possibilities for agreement through the bargaining process. Neither the parties nor the Government have a definite yardstick for determining when and how Government assistance should be invoked. There is need for integrated governmental machinery to provide the successive steps of mediation, voluntary arbitration, and—ultimately in appropriate cases—ascertainment of the facts of the dispute and the reporting of them to the public. Such machinery would facilitate and expedite the settlement of disputes.

Point No. 3 is the broadening of our program of social legislation to alleviate the causes of workers' insecurity.

On June 11, 1946, in my message vetoing the Case bill, I made a comprehensive statement of my views concerning labor-management relations. I said then, and I repeat now, that the solution of labor-management difficulties is to be found not only in legislation dealing directly with labor relations, but also in a program designed to remove the causes of insecurity felt by many workers in our industrial society. In this connection, for example, the Congress should consider the extension and broadening of our social-security system, better housing, a comprehensive national-health program, and provision for a fair, minimum wage.

Point No. 4 is the appointment of a Temporary Joint Commission to inquire into the entire field of labor-management relations.

I recommend that the Congress provide for the appointment of a Temporary Joint Commission to undertake this broad study.

The President, the Congress, and management and labor have a continuing responsibility to cooperate in seeking and finding the solution of these problems. I, therefore, recommend that the Commission be composed as follows: Twelve to be chosen by the Congress from the members of both parties in the House and the Senate, and eight representing the public, management and labor, to be appointed by the President.

The Commission should be charged with investigating and making recommendations upon certain major subjects, among others:

First. The special and unique problem of Nation-wide strikes in vital industries affecting the public interest. In particular, the Commission should examine into the question of how to settle or prevent such strikes without endangering our general democratic freedoms.

Upon a proper solution of this problem may depend the whole industrial future of the United States. The paralyzing effects of a Nation-wide strike in such industries as transportation, coal, oil, steel, or communications can result in national disaster. We have been able to avoid such disaster, in recent years, only by the use of extraordinary war powers. All those powers will soon be gone. In their place there must be created an adequate system and effective machinery in these vital fields. The problem will require careful study and a bold approach, but an approach consistent with the preservation of the rights of our people. The need is pressing. The Commission should give this its earliest attention.

Second. The best methods and procedures for carrying out the collective bargaining process. This should include the responsibilities of labor and management to negotiate freely and fairly with each other, and to refrain from strikes or lock-outs until all possibilities of negotiation have been exhausted.

Third. The underlying causes of labor-management disputes.

Some of the subjects presented here for investigation involve long-range study. Others can be considered immediately by the Commission and its recommendations can be submitted to the Congress in the near future.

I recommend that this Commission make its first report, including specific legislative recommendations, not later than March 15, 1947.

RESTRICTION OF MONOPOLY, AND PROMOTION OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

The second major policy I desire to lay before you has to do with the growing concentration of economic power and the threat to free competition in private enterprise. In 1941 the Temporary National Economic Committee completed a comprehensive investigation into the workings of the national economy. The Committee's study showed that, despite half a century of anti-trust-law enforcement, one of the gravest threats to our welfare lay in the increasing concentration of power in the hands of a small number of giant organizations.

During this war, this long-standing tendency toward economic concentration was accelerated. As a consequence, we now find that to a greater extent than ever before, whole industries are dominated by one or a few large organizations which can restrict production in the interest of higher profits and thus reduce employment and purchasing power.

In an effort to assure full opportunity and free competition to business we will vigorously enforce the antitrust laws. [Applause.] There is much the Congress can do to cooperate and assist in this program.

To strengthen and enforce the laws that regulate business practices is not enough. Enforcement must be supplemented by positive measures of aid to new enterprises. Government assistance, research programs, and credit powers should be designed and used to promote the growth of new firms and new industries. Assistance to small business is particularly important at this time when thousands of veterans who are potential business and industrial leaders are beginning their careers.

We should also give special attention to the decentralization of industry and the development of areas that are now under-industrialized.

HOUSING

The third major policy is also of great importance to the national economy—an aggressive program to encourage home construction. The first Federal program to relieve the veterans' housing shortage was announced in February 1946. In 1946 1,000,000 family housing units have been put under construction and more than 665,000 units have already been completed. The rate of expansion in construction has broken all records.

In the coming year the number of dwelling units built will approach, if not surpass, the top construction year of 1926. The primary responsibility to deliver housing at reasonable prices that veterans can afford rests with private industry and labor. The Government will continue to expedite the flow of key building materials, to limit nonresidential construction, and to give financial support where it will do the most good. Measures to stimulate rental housing and new types of housing construction will receive special emphasis.

To reach our long-range goal of adequate housing for all our people, comprehensive housing legislation is urgently required, similar to the nonpartisan bill passed by the Senate last year. At a minimum, such legislation should open the way for rebuilding the blighted areas of our cities and should establish positive incentives for the investment of billions of dollars of private capital in large-scale rental housing projects. It should provide for the improvement of housing in rural areas and for the construction, over a 4-year period, of half a million units of public low-rental housing. It should authorize a single peacetime Federal housing agency to assure efficient use of our resources on the vast housing front.

FISCAL AFFAIRS

The fourth major policy has to do with balancing the Budget. In a prosperous period such as the present one, the Budget of the Federal Government should be balanced. Prudent management of public finance requires that we begin the process of reducing the debt. The Budget which I shall submit to you this week has a small margin of surplus. In the Budget message, I am making recommendations which, if accepted, will result in a substantially larger surplus which should be applied to debt retirement. One of these recommendations is that the Congress take early action to continue throughout the next fiscal year the war excise-tax rates which, under the present law, will expire on June 30, 1947.

Expenditures relating to the war are still high. Considerable sums are required to alleviate world famine and suffering. Aid to veterans will continue at a peak level. The world situation is such that large military expenditures are required. Interest on the public debt and certain other costs are irreducible. For these reasons I have had to practice stringent economy in preparing the Budget; and I hope that the Congress will cooperate in this program of economy. [Applause.]

AGRICULTURE

The fifth major policy has to do with the welfare of our farm population.

Production of food reached record heights in 1946. Much of our tremendous grain crop can readily be sold abroad and thus will become no threat in our domestic markets. But in the next few years American agriculture can face the same dangers it did after World War I. In the early twenties the Nation failed to maintain outlets for the new productive capacity of our agricultural plant. It failed to provide means to protect the farmer while he adjusted his acreage to peacetime demands.

The result we all remember too well. Farm production stayed up while demand and prices fell, in contrast with industry where prices stayed up and output declined. Farm surpluses piled up, and disaster followed.

We must make sure of meeting the problems which we failed to meet after the First World War. Present laws give considerable stability to farm prices for 1947 and 1948, and these 2 years must be utilized to maintain and develop markets for our great productive power.

The purpose of these laws was to permit an orderly transition from war to peace. The Government plan of support prices was not designed to absorb, at great cost, the unlimited surpluses of a highly productive agriculture.

We must not wait until the guaranties expire to set the stage for permanent farm welfare.

The farmer is entitled to a fair income.

Ways can be found to utilize his new skills and better practices, to expand his markets at home and abroad, and to carry out the objectives of a balanced pattern of peacetime production without either undue sacrifice by farm people or undue expense to the Government.

HEALTH AND GENERAL WELFARE

Of all our national resources, none is of more basic value than the health of our people. Over a year ago I presented to the Congress my views on a national-health program. The Congress acted on several of the recommendations in this program—mental health, the health of mothers and children, and hospital construction. I urge this Congress to complete the work begun last year and to enact the most important recommendation of the program—to provide adequate medical care to all who need it, not as charity but on the basis of payments made by the beneficiaries of the program.

One administrative change would help greatly to further our national program in the fields of health, education, and welfare. I again recommend the establishment of a well-integrated Department of Welfare.

VETERANS

Fourteen million World War II servicemen have returned to civilian life. The great majority have found their places as citizens of their communities and their Nation. It is a tribute to the fiber of our servicemen and to the flexibility of our economy that these adjustments have been made so rapidly and so successfully.

More than 2,000,000 of these veterans are attending schools or acquiring job skills through the financial assistance of the Federal Government. Thousands of sick and wounded veterans are daily receiving the best of medical and hospital care. Half a million have obtained loans, with Government guaranties, to purchase homes or farms or to embark upon new businesses. Compensation is being paid in almost 2,000,000 cases for disabilities or death. More than 3,000,000 are continuing to maintain their low-cost national service life insurance policies. Almost 7,000,000 veterans have been aided by unemployment and self-employment allowances.

Exclusive of mustering-out payments and terminal-leave pay, the program for veterans of all wars is costing over $7,000,000,000 a year—one-fifth of our total Federal budget. This is the most far-reaching and complete veterans' program ever conceived by any nation.

Except for minor adjustments, I believe that our program of benefits for veterans is now complete. In the long run, the success of the program will not be measured by the number of veterans obtaining financial aid or by the number of dollars we spend. History will judge us not by the money we spend, but by the further contribution we enable our veterans to make to their country. In considering any additional legislation, that must be our criterion.

CIVIL RIGHTS

We have recently witnessed in this country numerous attacks upon the constitutional rights of individual citizens as a result of racial and religious bigotry. Substantial segments of our people have been prevented from exercising fully their right to participate in the election of public officials, both locally and nationally. Freedom to engage in lawful callings has been denied.

The will to fight these crimes should be in the heart of every one of us.

For the Federal Government that fight is now being carried on by the Department of Justice to the full extent of the powers that have been conferred upon it. While the Constitution withholds from the Federal Government the major task of preserving the peace in the several States, I am not convinced that present legislation reaches the limit of Federal power to protect the civil rights of its citizens.

I have, therefore, by Executive order, established the President's Committee on Civil Rights to study and report on the whole problem of federally secured civil rights, with a view to making recommendations to the Congress.

NATURAL RESOURCES

In our responsibility to promote the general welfare of the people, we have always to consider the natural resources of our country. They are the foundation of our life. In the development of the great river systems of America there is the major opportunity of our generation to contribute to the increase of the national wealth. This program is already well along; it should be pushed with full vigor. [Applause.]

I must advise the Congress that we are rapidly becoming a "have not" nation as to many of our minerals. The economic progress and the security of our country depend upon an expanding return of mineral discovery and upon improved methods of recovery. The Federal Government must do its part to meet this need.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Progress in reaching our domestic goals is closely related to our conduct of foreign affairs. All that I have said about maintaining a sound and prosperous economy and improving the welfare of our people has greater meaning because of the world leadership of the United States. What we do, or fail to do, at home affects not only ourselves but millions throughout the world. If we are to fulfill our responsibilities to ourselves and to other people, we must make sure that the United States is sound economically, socially, and politically. Only then will we be able to help bring about the elements of peace in other countries—political stability, economic advancement, and social progress.

Peace treaties for Italy, Bulgaria, Rumania, and Hungary have finally been prepared. Following the signing of these treaties next month in Paris, they will be submitted to the Senate for ratification. This Government does not regard the treaties as completely satisfactory. Whatever their defects, however, I am convinced that they are as good as we can hope to obtain by agreement among the principal wartime Allies. Further dispute and delay would gravely jeopardize political stability in the countries concerned for many years.

During the long months of debate on these treaties, we have made it clear to all nations that the United States will not consent to settlements at the expense of principles we regard as vital to a just and enduring peace. We have made it equally clear that we will not retreat to isolationism. [Applause.] Our policies will be the same during the forthcoming negotiations in Moscow on the German and Austrian treaties, and during future conferences on the Japanese treaty.

The delay in arriving at the first peace settlements is due partly to the difficulty of reaching agreement with the Soviet Union on the terms of settlement. Whatever differences there may have been between us and the Soviet Union, however, should not be allowed to obscure the fact that the basic interests of both nations lie in the early making of a peace under which the peoples of all countries may return, as free men and women, to the esssential tasks of production and reconstruction. The major concern of each of us should be the promotion of collective security, not the advancement of individual security.

Our policy toward the Soviet Union is guided by the same principles which determine our policies toward all nations. We seek only to uphold the principles of international justice which have been embodied in the Charter of the United Nations.

We must now get on with the peace settlements. The occupying powers should recognize the independence of Austria and withdraw their troops. The Germans and the Japanese cannot be left in doubt and fear as to their future; they must know their national boundaries, their resources, and what reparations they must pay. Without trying to manage their internal affairs, we can insure that those countries do not rearm.

INTERNATIONAL RELIEF AND DISPLACED PERSONS

The United States can be proud of its part in caring for peoples reduced to want by the ravages of war, and in aiding nations to restore their national economies. We have shipped more supplies to the hungry peoples of the world since the end of the war than all other countries combined. [Applause.]

However, insofar as admitting displaced persons is concerned, I do not feel that the United States has done its part. Only about 5,000 of them have entered this country since May 1946. The fact is that the executive agencies are now doing all that is reasonably possible under the limitation of existing law and established quotas. Congressional assistance in the form of new legislation is needed. I urge the Congress to turn its attention to this world problem, in an effort to find ways whereby we can fulfill our responsibilities to these thousands of homeless and suffering refugees of all faiths.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

World economic cooperation is essential to world political cooperation. We have made a good start on economic cooperation through the International Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and the Export-Import Bank. We must now take other steps for the reconstruction of world trade and we should continue to strive for an international trade system as free from obstructions as possible.

ATOMIC ENERGY

The United States has taken the lead in the endeavor to put atomic energy under effective international control. We seek no monopoly for ourselves or for any group of nations. We ask only that there be safeguards sufficient to insure that no nation will be able to use this power for military purposes. So long as all governments are not agreed on means of international control of atomic energy, the shadow of fear will obscure the bright prospects for the peaceful use of this enormous power.

In accordance with the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, the Commission established under that law is assuming full jurisdiction over our domestic atomic energy enterprise. The program of the Commission will, of course, be worked out in close collaboration with the military services in conformity with the wish of the Congress, but it is my fervent hope that the military significance of atomic energy will steadily decline. We look to the Commission to foster the development of atomic energy for industrial use and scientific and medical research. In the vigorous and effective development of peaceful uses of atomic energy rests our hope that this new force may ultimately be turned into a blessing for all nations.

MILITARY POLICY

In 1946 the Army and Navy completed the demobilization of their wartime forces. They are now maintaining the forces which we need for national defense and to fulfill our international obligations.

We live in a world in which strength on the part of peace-loving nations is still the greatest deterrent to aggression. World stability can be destroyed when nations with great responsibilities neglect to maintain the means of discharging those responsibilities.

This is an age when unforeseen attack could come with unprecedented speed. We must be strong enough to defeat, and thus to forestall any such attack. In our steady progress toward a more rational world order, the need for large armed forces is progressively declining; but the stabilizing force of American military strength must not be weakened until our hopes are fully realized. When a system of collective security under the United Nations has been established, we shall be willing to lead in collective disarmament, but, until such a system becomes a reality, we must not again allow our weakness to invite attack. [Applause.]

For these reasons, we need well-equipped, well-trained armed forces and we must be able to mobilize rapidly our resources in men and material for our own defense, should the need arise.

The Army will be reduced to 1,070,000 officers and men by July 1, 1947. Half of the Army will be used for occupation duties abroad and most of the remainder will be employed at home in the support of these overseas forces.

The Navy is supporting the occupation troops in Europe and in the Far East. Its fundamental mission—to support our national interests wherever required—is unchanged. The Navy, including the Marine Corps, will average 571,000 officers and men during the fiscal year 1948.

We are encountering serious difficulties in maintaining our forces at even these reduced levels. Occupation troops are barely sufficient to carry out the duties which our foreign policy requires. Our forces at home are at a point where further reduction is impracticable. We should like an Army and a Navy composed entirely of long-term volunteers, but in spite of liberal inducements the basic needs of the Army are not now being met by voluntary enlistments.

The War Department has advised me that it is unable to make an accurate forecast at the present time as to whether it will be possible to maintain the strength of the Army by relying exclusively on volunteers. The situation will be much clearer in a few weeks, when the results of the campaign for volunteers are known. The War Department will make its recommendation as to the need for the extension of Selective Service in sufficient time to enable the Congress to take action prior to the expiration of the present law on March 31. The responsibility for maintaining our armed forces at the strength necessary for our national safety rests with the Congress.

The development of a trained citizen reserve is also vital to our national security. This can best be accomplished through universal training. I have appointed an Advisory Commission on Universal Training to study the various plans for a training program and I expect that the recommendations of the Commission will be of benefit to the Congress and to me in reaching decisions on this problem.

The cost of the military establishment is substantial. There is one certain way by which we can cut costs and at the same time enhance our national security. That is by the establishment of a single Department of National Defense. I shall communicate with the Congress in the near future with reference to the establishment of a single Department of National Defense.

National security does not consist only of an army, a navy, and an air force. It rests on a much broader base. It depends on a sound economy of prices and wages, on a prosperous agriculture, on satisfied and productive workers, on a competitive private enterprise free from monopolistic repression, on continued industrial harmony and production, on civil liberties and human freedoms—on all the forces which create in our men and women a strong moral fiber and spiritual stamina.

But we have a higher duty and a greater responsibility than the attainment of national security. Our goal is collective security for all mankind.

If we can work in a spirit of understanding and mutual respect, we can fulfill this solemn obligation which rests upon us.

The spirit of the American people can set the course of world history. If we maintain and strengthen our cherished ideals, and if we share our great bounty with war-stricken people over the world, then the faith of our citizens in freedom and democracy will spread over the whole earth and free men everywhere will share our devotion to these ideals.

Let us have the will and the patience to do this job together.

May the Lord strengthen us in our faith.

May He give us wisdom to lead the peoples of the world in His ways of peace. [Applause, the Members rising.]

At 1 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m., the President retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The members of the President's Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The ambassadors, ministers, and chargés d'affaires of foreign governments retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 1 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m., the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the President pro tempore and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President of the United States be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

TRIBUTE TO THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I deem it appropriate that it be said by someone belonging to the minority that the present occupant of the chair comes to the high position which he holds possessed of the confidence and the good will of the country and his colleagues here in the House. That his services will redound to his own credit and to the public good, his high character, his fine sense of justice and fair play, his patience and his tolerance, his industry and his understanding, give complete assurance.

This House in naming its Speaker bestows the highest honor within its power; and that this honor in the instant case will be worn worthily, old friends of the recipient who have labored with him many years proudly pledge their word. Just a few days ago the gentleman was leader of a faction; today he is the captain of the hosts, all united, let us hope, in the common intent and purpose of serving with undivided loyalty this our common country.

Mr. Speaker, as the now presiding officer of this House, you succeed a wise, a noble, and a good man.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appreciates the splendid remarks of the gentleman from Georgia.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

HON. SAM RAYBURN

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, this day is memorable for many reasons. It is particularly memorable for one very outstanding reason, and this is that it is the sixty-fifth birthday of our great friend, our able colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

The other day when the gentleman from Texas introduced the gentleman from Massachusetts as his successor to the Speakership, he said that if we had to have a Republican Speaker, he was mighty glad that it was JOE MARTIN. I think that we can say for Mr. RAYBURN that there must be a minority leader and we, in turn, are happy that it is SAM RAYBURN. He served illustriously and well as Speaker of this great body. He was always fair and square in his dealings with all of us. He was considerate and helpful; yes, helpful to the newest Member as well as the oldest; always honorable, and possessed of a balanced, good judgment; an able speaker, and a man of complete integrity whose word was always good.

We, in this House, undertake a momentous session. We have just heard the President speak of our responsibility in molding the affairs of our country. We have heard the Speaker speak of cooperation between the Executive and the legislative branch.

I think that SAM RAYBURN on his side and I on my side join in expressing to the President our firm intention to cooperate for the welfare of our beloved country. I am quite sure that with the minority under the leadership of our colleague, Mr. RAYBURN, who today celebrates the sixty-fifth anniversary of his birth—and incidentally, he might even desire that we say it was the thirty-fifth, but at any rate, it is the sixty-fifth—we enter upon this great task which lies before us assured that in cooperation among us and with the Executive we shall find the right answers for the welfare of our country.

I am sure that I project faithfully the feelings of all the Members on this side of the aisle, as well as those of the minority, when I pay earnest tribute to the great service which the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN, has rendered the Republic in this Chamber during the last 35 years. In committee, on the floor, in the chair of the Speaker, he has been studious, faithful in his defense of the Constitution, gentle of manner and ever cordial and genial in his relations with all of his colleagues, regardless of party, and unmindful of differences of opinion expressed in legislative debate.

In that respect he has been not only a servant but a living symbol of the one best hope of mankind—the conviction that a society of free people is equipped by Providence to govern itself through representative bodies such as the Congress of the United States.

A son of Texas, he has brought to his tasks here the rugged qualities of heart and mind which characterize the entire history of that great State. As Texas is big on the map of the United States, so is our good friend the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN, big in his thinking, in his generous sentiments for the public welfare, in his easy and genial moods of cooperation and sincere friendship.

As a Member who was only a boy of 12 years when the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN, began his notable career in Congress, I count it a high privilege indeed to stand before this great body to pay tribute to a man who thus has served so nobly to protect, defend, and preserve the Republic.

May he be with us on many future birthday anniversaries, and may his lot among us reflect always the high place he has won in the regard, esteem, and affection of us all.

THE LATE DAVE E. SATTERFIELD, JR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House the death of Hon. Dave E. Satterfield, Jr., which occurred in Richmond, Va., on Friday, December 27, 1946, after a brief illness. He represented the Third District of Virginia in the Congress from November 2, 1937, until February 15, 1945, when he resigned to become executive director and general counsel of the Life Insurance Association of America.

During his service in the House he was a member of the Judiciary Committee. His outstanding ability and sound judgment were quickly recognized by his colleagues and his sincerity of purpose and fidelity to duty won their confidence and respect.

Most of his life was spent in the public service. Having served his country as a naval aviator in World War I, he was called to active duty by the Navy in World War II, and sent to England on a special mission. He served his city, State, and Nation with great distinction in various capacities over a long period of years and his loss will be keenly felt.

We attended college together, and it was my privilege to succeed him in the Congress. He was a true and loyal friend, and I prized his friendship very highly. I know that his former colleagues in the House share with me a feeling of deep sorrow over his untimely passing.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in three instances. Two of these extensions will exceed the limit, one by $140 and the other by $200, but I ask that they be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain excerpts on the portal-to-portal controversy.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota and Mr. DONDERO asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include a magazine article and an editorial.

Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by the Attorney General of the United States in reference to oil compacts.

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two articles, one from the Chicago Sun and one from the New York Times.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, after 14 years of frustration in our attempts to rid the people of bureaucracy and Government regimentation, we Republicans have been returned to Congress as the majority party by an overwhelming vote of the people.

Let none of us who have been elected and reelected to the Eightieth Congress think for one moment that it was due to our own superior personalities that we were given such large majorities by the people.

The fact is the American people became dissatisfied, discouraged, and disgusted with regimentation and tyrannical dictation by power-drunk bureaucrats and political leaders who in late years came into control in America but who refused to recognize the true American ideals.

It is our obligation as newly elected Members of Congress not to allow ourselves and our country to be taken over by certain elements in America who have no real interest in Americans; who have no respect for the principles of free enterprise and true democracy. It is our duty as duly elected Members of the Congress of the United States of America to wipe out restriction upon our free economy and to eradicate regimentation of free American industry and private enterprise. The obligation is ours, and the decision whether we shall be a free or a shackled people must be made now.

Americans fear the infiltration of subversive elements into our Government, in any and all its departments, whether it be in the executive, the legislative, or the judicial.

J. Edgar Hoover, head of our Federal Bureau of Investigation, knew what he was talking about when, at the national convention of the American Legion this fall, he startled the Nation out of its lethargy, stating that during the past 5 years communism has made its deepest inroads in our American Government; that the divide-and-conquer tactics of Hitler are employed with greater skill today by American Communists with their boring-from-within tactics; that the Communist influence has projected itself into some newspapers, magazines, books, over the radio, on the screen, and in some schools and colleges; and that the ultimate aim of communism is the destruction of American freedom and liberty. Mr. Hoover made those terrific assertions only after years of investigation into the machinations of subversive elements in this country.

We who constitute the Eightieth Congress must not permit these elements to get control in America; otherwise the cherished liberty and freedom guaranteed to us by our Constitution will become but a memory.

Let us therefore stand united, Republicans and Democrats—Americans all—ever ready from this very moment to combat at every turn the elements that oppose our American ideals and transgress our American traditions. We must be ever watchful to stamp out those influences that operate under false and deceptive cloaks and banners to undermine our own true Americanism.

There is a national and an international conspiracy by foreign elements who worship foreign ideologies to divide our people, to bring about a disregard for our American representative form of government, and to conquer this Nation.

We must not allow foreign ideologies to triumph in this country. The American people have given us a mandate as their chosen representatives to revive the cherished principles of freedom and true democracy set forth by our founding fathers in the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States of America, those American patriots who ordained and established the Constitution in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, promote the general welfare, and to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

And so let us forget petty partisanship and petty politics. Let us think only of America. Let us be American always. This is our responsibility to the American people who elected us; this is our opportunity.

WINDFALLS UNDER THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938—LEGISLATION TO PREVENT ECONOMIC RUIN AND "SHAKE-DOWN" LAW SUITS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in June of 1938 the Congress declared:

That the existence, in industries engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, of labor conditions detrimental to the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency, and general well-being of workers (1) causes commerce and the channels and instrumentalities of commerce to be used to spread and perpetuate such labor conditions among the workers of the several States; (2) burdens commerce and the free flow of goods in commerce; (3) constitutes an unfair method of competition in commerce; (4) leads to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of goods in commerce; and (5) interferes with the orderly and fair marketing of goods in commerce.

Congress further declared it:

To be the policy of sections 201–219 of this title, through the exercise by Congress of its powers to regulate commerce among the several States, to correct and as rapidly as practicable to eliminate the conditions above referred to in such industries without substantially curtailing employment or earning power.

Commerce as used in this act was defined to mean "trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or from any State to any place outside thereof."

To effectuate its policy the Congress enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the pertinent provisions of which are hereinafter quoted.

MINIMUM WAGES

The act provided that every employer subject to its provisions "shall pay to each of his employees who is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce" a minimum wage. (29 U. S. Code, sec. 206.)

MAXIMUM HOURS

Section 207 declared that:

No employer shall, except as otherwise provided in this section, employ any of his employees who is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, for a workweek longer than 40 hours.

PENALTIES—CIVIL AND CRIMINAL LIABILITY

To force compliance with the terms of sections 206, 207, section 216, reading as follows, was incorporated:

Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of section 215 of this title shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both. No person shall be imprisoned under this subsection except for an offense committed after the conviction of such person for a prior offense under this subsection.

(b) Any employer who violates the provisions of section 206 or section 207 of this title shall be liable to the employee or employees affected in the amount of their unpaid minimum wages, or their unpaid overtime compensation, as the case may be, and in an addditional equal amount as liquidated damages. Action to recover such liability may be maintained in any court of competent jurisdiction by any one or more employees for and in behalf of himself or themselves and other employees similarly situated, or such employee or employees may designate an agent or representative to maintain such action for and in behalf of all employees similarly situated. The court in such action shall, in addition to any judgment awarded to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, allow a reasonable attorney's fee to be paid by the defendant, and costs of the action. (June 25, 1938, ch. 676, sec. 16, 52 Stat. 1069.)

The United States Supreme Court said that one purpose of the act was to reduce the hours of work and spread employment by applying financial pressure upon the employer. (Murray v. Noblesville Milling Co. (131 Fed. (2d), 470). Certiorari denied, 63 S. Ct. 832.)

Until John L. Lewis raised the question of portal-to-portal pay in the coal mines and was sustained by the United States Supreme Court in Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Muscoda Local (321 U. S. 590, 63 S. Ct. 698, 88 L. Ed. 849, 152 ALR 1014), decided March 27, 1944; Jewell Ridge Corp. v. Local No. 6167, NMWA (325 U. S. 161, 65 S. Ct. 1063, 89 L. Ed. 1534), decided May 7, 1945, there was little, if any, effort made to collect compensation for overtime which had not been spent in productive work. Even then legal action to recover for unpaid overtime spent in going to or preparing for productive work did not become epidemic.

June 10, 1946, the United States Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Murphy, Mr. Justice Burton, and Mr. Justice Frankfurter dissenting, handed down its decision in Anderson v. Mt. Clemens Pottery Co. (66 S. Ct. 1187).

Across the country almost with the rapidity of a prairie fire swept a wave of suits brought principally by CIO unions seeking more than $2,000,000,000 in payment for overtime not spent in productive work.

The question here at issue is (a) whether the Congress may now amend the National Fair Labor Standards Act so as to limit recovery for unpaid compensation for overtime to overtime which was actually spent in productive work.

(b) Require such suits to be brought within 1 year of the time when the action accrues, and

(c) Limit such suits to those brought after the enactment of the proposed amendments.

The first two amendments attached hereto are designed to accomplish the first purpose; the third to bring about the second and third results.

A brief statement of the facts found and the law construed in the Anderson case, insofar as they shed light upon the proposal to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act in such manner so as to end this drive to recover billions never expected to be paid by employers—never thought due by employees—may be of interest.

The suit was brought by Steve Anderson and six fellow employees and their local union under section 216 of the act on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated.

The purpose was to collect pay and a half doubled at the regular rate of pay for the overtime spent by the employees on company property, figured from the hour when they checked in at the time clock to the time when they actually went to work or the blowing of the work whistle.

A discussion of all the facts found by the court or of all the rules of construction laid down bearing upon the liability of the employer for unpaid overtime and the amount of such liability under section 207 of the act is unnecessary for the present purpose.

It is sufficient to say that the employees at the pottery company punched a time clock—probably near the entrance of the plant—at, for example, 6:46 a. m. and 12:46 p. m., but did not actually begin productive work until the whistle blew at 7 a. m. and 1 p. m.

The case was in the first instance referred to a master, who found that the actual productive work did not begin before the whistle blew, except in a few instances, which were counterbalanced by occasions when work began after the scheduled hours or ended before the scheduled hours or ended before the scheduled cessation of productive work.

The Supreme Court agreed with this finding. It further held that the employees did not prove that they were engaged in work for the employer from the moment when they punched in at the time clock to the moment when they punched out, but that they were required to be ready for work at their benches at the scheduled starting times.

The employees were given 14-minute periods in which to punch the time clock, walk to the places of work, and prepare for productive labor, but there was no requirement that the employee check in or be on the premises at any particular time during the 14-minute interval.

The Court further held that the time clock did not show the time during which the employees were compelled to be on the premises or at any prescribed place of work and thus could not form the sole basis of determining the statutory workweek.

But the Court further said:

The employees did prove, however, that it was necessary for them to be on the premises for some time prior and subsequent to the scheduled working hours. The employer required them to punch in, walk to their work benches, and perform preliminary duties during the 14-minute periods preceding productive work; the same activities in reverse occurred in the 14-minute periods subsequent to the completion of productive work. Since the statutory workweek includes all time during which an employee is necessarily required to be on the employer's premises, on duty or at a prescribed workplace, the time spent in these activities must be accorded appropriate compensation.

No claim is here made, though, as to the time spent in waiting to punch the time clocks and we need not explore that aspect of the situation. * * * But the time necessarily spent by the employees in walking to work on the employer's premises, following the punching of the time clocks, was working time within the scope of section 7 (a). * * * Such time was under the complete control of the employer, being dependent solely upon the physical arrangements which the employer made in the factory. Those arrangements in this case compelled the employees to spend an estimated 2 to 12 minutes daily, if not more, in walking on the premises. Without such walking on the part of the employees the productive aims of the employer could not have been achieved. The employees' convenience and necessity, moreover, bore no relation whatever to this walking time; they walked on the employer's premises only because they were compelled to do so by the necessities of the employer's business. In that respect the walking time differed vitally from the time spent in traveling from workers' homes to the factory. * * *

It follows that the time spent in walking to work on the employer's premises, after the time clocks were punched, involved "physical or mental exertion (whether burdensome or not) controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer and his business." * * * Work of that character must be included in the statutory workweek and compensated accordingly, regardless of contrary custom or contract.

But under the conditions prevalent in respondent's plant, compensable working time was limited to the minimum time necessarily spent in walking at an ordinary rate along the most direct route from time clock to workbench. Many employees took roundabout journeys and stopped off en route for purely personal reasons. It would be unfair and impractical to compensate them for doing that which they were not required to do. Especially is this so in view of the fact that precise calculation of the minimum walking time is easily obtainable in the ordinary situation. * * *

The employees proved, in addition, that they pursued certain preliminary activities after arriving at their places of work, such as putting on aprons and overalls, removing shirts, taping or greasing arms, putting on finger cots, preparing the equipment for productive work, turning on switches for lights and machinery, opening windows, and assembling and sharpening tools. These activities are clearly work falling within the definition enunciated and applied in the Tennessee Coal and Jewell Ridge cases. They involve exertion of a physical nature, controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the employer's benefit. They are performed solely on the employer's premises and are a necessary prerequisite to productive work. There is nothing in such activities that partakes only of the personal convenience or needs of the employees. Hence they constitute work that must be accorded appropriate compensation under the statute. (66 S. Ct. 1187, 1194-1195.)

The Court sent the case back to the lower court for a "determination of the amount of walking time involved and the amount of preliminary activities performed, giving due consideration to the de minimis doctrine and calculating the resulting damages under the act."

A careful reading of the decision of the district court (60 F. Supp. 146), of the decision of the circuit court of appeals (149 Fed. (2d) 461), and of the Supreme Court's decision (66 S. Ct. 1187) will show that the door has been opened to a multiplicity of suits involving the payment of billions of dollars which the employer had no reason to expect he would be required to pay; which the employees never expected to receive or to which they never thought they were entitled.

The decision, as some previous decisions on labor legislation which placed added burdens on industry, lays down a rule which ignores the usual practice and custom which previously prevailed and which were taken into consideration when collective-bargaining contracts fixing hours and wages were negotiated.

It is obvious that, if the employer is to be required to pay, if the employee is to receive, compensation for time spent for other than productive work, that fact should be known and considered when the parties enter into contracts of employment.

It is axiomatic that wages must be paid out of sales and the price at which things are to be sold must be based upon the total amount of the wage which is usually a large part of the cost. Any other procedure is unfair to both employee and employer.

The unfortunate situation now confronting employers the country over is an invitation to unscrupulous lawyers and racketeering labor leaders to not only make demands sustainable under the Supreme Court decision of June 10, 1946, and those in the portal-to-portal cases, but to make demands which are unjustified even under that decision, and thus force employers to either pay some sum in compromise or meet the burdensome and sometimes unsustainable expense of costly lawsuits. The law as written, the decisions as announced, open the door to unscrupulous blackmailers, and to lawyers more interested in fees than in justice for their clients.

The manner in which some unions are using and abusing a law enacted by Congress to advance the interests of all employees by spreading employment, lessening their hours of work and increasing compensation, and the recent decisions of the courts herein cited, is shown by an ad printed in the News-Palladium, of Benton Harbor, in the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, on the 21st day of December 1946. In blackfaced type appears this caption:

DO YOU WANT YOUR BACK PAY?

The ad continues:

If you have worked in a shop engaged in interstate commerce any time in the years 1940 to the present, you are entitled to back pay, which may run into hundreds of dollars.

You are in interstate commerce if you are engaged in the manufacture or distribution of goods across a State line.

But, you must file a claim.

The UER and MWA, Local 931, will maintain office hours to midnight tonight to assist you regardless of your affiliation or nonaffiliation in filing your claim. No charge for this service.

The point is this—note the misstatement in the first paragraph which I quote again:

If you have worked in a shop engaged in interstate commerce any time in the years 1940 to the present, you are entitled to back pay, which may run into hundreds of dollars.

Obviously, the fact that one has worked in a shop engaged in interstate commerce from any time in the year 1940 to the present does not of itself entitle him to back pay.

An employee may or may not be entitled to back pay under the act depending upon many circumstances usually varying in every case.

That ad is an invitation to employees who may or who may not be entitled to back pay, who even though entitled to back pay under the technical construction of the act, may or may not desire to sue an employer, to start a lawsuit.

That ad holds out to all employees in that locality the suggestion that they may obtain hundreds of dollars by suing their employers and that advice relating to such a suit will cost them nothing.

The men signing that ad are inviting the employees to start lawsuits against those who over the years have brought factories to the cities, given employment. Surely, if the employees, themselves, do not feel aggrieved, why should others encourage litigation, create bad feeling and perhaps bring action which will kill the industry?

A WORKWEEK

The Fair Labor Standards Act does not define a workweek nor is it probable that Congress, when the Act was passed, ever contemplated or anticipated any such unfortunate situation as now confronts American industry and, indirectly, the Nation.

Without delay, in order to protect our national economy, the Fair Labor Standards Act should be amended to—

(a) Define the term "workweek";

(b) Limit the workweek to time actually spent in productive work;

(c) Limit the time within which suits to recover for the payment of the minimum wage or unpaid overtime should be brought; and

(d) Limit all punishment and liability imposed upon an employer to that which accrues after the passage of these amendments.

To accomplish that purpose, the three amendments attached hereto have been offered.

The proposal will undoubtedly be met by the argument that a statute cannot be given retroactive effect; that employees have a vested right in the recovery authorized by section 216, Twenty-ninth United States Code, and that any amendment prohibiting the exercise of that right is in violation of the fifth amendment.

Such argument, however, is not sound.

There can, in the nature of things, be no vested right in an existing law which precludes its change or repeal. (11 American Jurisprudence, sec. 372, 6 R. C. L., sec. 296.)

American Jurisprudence cites, among others, the cases of Truax v. Corrigan (257 U. S. 312), Arizona Employers' Liability Cases—Arizona Copper Co. v. Hammer (250 U. S. 400), Middleton v. Texas Power & L. Co. (249 U. S. 152), New York C. R. Co. v. White (243 U. S. 188), Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Tranbarger (238 U. S. 67), Second Employers' Liability Cases—Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (223 U. S. 1), Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley (219 U. S. 467), Meriwether v. Garrett (102 U. S. 472).

There can be no vested right in the continued existence of a statute or rule of the common law which precludes its change or repeal. (16 C. J. Se., sec. 223.)

Also citing many cases.

The question here involved, that is, as to whether the Fair Labor Standards Act can be so amended as to prevent the filing of additional suits or the prosecution of suits already filed under section 216 would seem to have been decided in the affirmative by the Supreme Court of the United States, when, on May 22, 1944, in National Carloading Corp. v. Phoenix-El Paso Express (64 U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 1156), it denied certiorari to review a decision of the Supreme Court of Texas.

The Supreme Court of Texas, in 1943—National Carloading Corp. v. Phoenix-El Paso Express (176 Southwestern Reporter 564)—had before it a case where a motor carrier sought to recover from a freight forwarder certain charges which had not been made.

Section 217 (b) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 1935 (49 U. S. Code, 317 (b)) provided that no common carrier by motor vehicle shall charge or demand or collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for transportation than the rates, and so forth.

In this case, a lesser charge had been made and the plaintiff sought to recover the difference between the lesser charge and the published rate.

But section 419 of part 4 (49 U. S. Code, sec. 1019), enacted subsequently—May 16, 1942—provided that—

No person shall be subject to any punishment or liability under the provisions of this chapter and chapter 1, 8, and 12 of this title, on account of any act done or omitted to be done prior to the effective date of this chapter.

In deciding the case, the Texas court, among other things, said—pages 567–568:

We think the court of civil appeals was correct in its conclusion that the quoted section from the 1942 amendment is a complete bar to the recovery of the plaintiff. As above stated, plaintiff's suit is predicated upon section 217 (b) which made it obligatory upon the plaintiff to collect from defendant the full legal tariffs in effect at the time of the shipments, which would mean that the plaintiff should have collected 85 cents per hundred pounds unless the defendant was entitled under the Motor Carrier Act to file tariffs and participate in joint rates with plaintiff on the basis of 45 cents per hundredweight from El Paso to Phoenix. Therefore, the suit of the plaintiff is not based upon a contract or agreement but arises by reason of special statutory authority.

It is generally conceded that a right of action given by a statute may be taken away at any time, even after it has accrued and proceedings have been commenced to enforce it.

The Court further said—page 569:

The courts are generally agreed that rights of action based upon purely statutory grounds may be abolished by the legislature even after they have accrued.

The Court also said—pages 569–570:

Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, in overruling this (a similar) contention, in delivering the opinion of the Court said:

"This argument is in the teeth of another established principle. Contracts, however express, cannot fetter the constitutional authority of the Congress. Contracts may create rights of property, but when contracts deal with a subject matter which lies within the control of the Congress, they have a congenital infirmity. Parties cannot remove their transactions from the reach of dominant constitutional power by making contracts about them. See Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter (209 U. S. 349, 357, 28 S. Ct. 529, 52 L. Ed. 828 (832), 14 Ann. Cas. 560)."

We think it therefore becomes evident that the plaintiff does not possess such a vested right as to come within the inhibition of the fifth amendment. Such a right must be something more than a mere expectation based upon an anticipated continuance of the existing law. It must have become a title, legal or equitable, to the present or future enjoyment of property, or to the present or future enforcement of a demand, or a legal exemption from the demand of another. If, before rights become vested in particular individuals, the convenience of the State induces amendment or repeal of the laws upon which they are based, these individuals are left without any remedy at law to enforce their claims; and if final relief has not been granted before the repeal goes into effect, it cannot be granted thereafter, even if a judgment has been entered and the cause is pending upon appeal. The general rule is that when such law is repealed without a saving clause, it is considered, except as to transactions past and closed, as though it had never existed.

This decision of the Texas Supreme Court has the sanction of the United States Supreme Court, as certiorari was denied on May 22, 1944, 64 United States Supreme Court Reports 1156.

An examination of the authorities would seem to leave no room for doubt that there is no vested right in a remedy given by law which precludes its change or repeal; that the Congress cannot by statute deprive itself of its constitutional jurisdiction to legislate; that what the Congress by legislation gives, it may, until the gift has been reduced to possession, by legislation take away.

To relieve an intolerable situation, to prevent national economic disaster, to prevent racketeering, the following amendments should be adopted by the Congress at an early date:

A bill to amend sections 203 (52 Stat. 1060), 207 (b) (52 Stat. 1063), and 216 (b) (52 Stat. 1069) of title 29 of the United States Code, the same being the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938

Be it enacted, etc., That section 203 of title 29 of the United States Code (52 Stat. 1060), the same being a section of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, be amended by adding the following subdivision:

"(n) Workweek means time spent in productive work, but does not include time going to or from work, changing clothing, putting on aprons or overalls, taping or greasing arms, putting on finger cots, preparing equipment for productive work, turning on switches for light or machinery, opening windows or assembling or sharpening tools, or time spent in preparation for work or which is not time actually consumed in productive work: Provided, however, That maintenance workers shall be entitled to compensation for the time actually consumed in and about their regular and customary work."

SEC. 2. That subsection (b) of section 207 of said title 29, United States Code (52 Stat. 1063), be amended by adding the following subdivision:

"(4) No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee for a workweek in excess of that specified in said subsection without paying the compensation for overtime employment prescribed therein, unless such employee has actually been employed in productive work: Provided, That in computing the number of hours of a workweek there shall not be included any time as productive work, or work for which payment is to be made, which lapsed between the time when the employee entered the place of employment or punched a time clock and the time the employee began productive work, or which was used in any manner other than when the employee was actually engaged in productive work: Provided further, That maintenance workers shall be entitled to compensation for the time actually consumed in and about their regular and customary work."

SEC. 3. That subsection (b) of section 216 of said title 29, United States Code (52 Stat. 1069), be amended by striking out said subsection (b) and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) Any employer who violates the provisions of section 206 or section 207 of this title shall be liable to the employee or employees affected in the amount of their unpaid minimum wages or their unpaid overtime compensation, as the case may be: Provided, however, That no employer shall be liable for, nor shall any employee or any person bringing suit for or in his behalf be entitled to recover for, any unpaid overtime compensation unless the one bringing such suit shall establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the unpaid overtime compensation is due because of time actually spent by the employee in productive work and not for time spent in going to or from the scene of productive work or in preparing therefor. Action to recover such liability may be maintained in any court of competent jurisdiction by any one or more employees for and in behalf of himself or themselves and other employees similarly situated, or such employee or employees may designate in writing an agent or representative to maintain such action for and in behalf of all employees similarly situated: Provided, however, That no such action shall be brought or maintained unless the same be filed in a court of competent jurisdiction within 1 year of the date when such action accrues: Provided further, That no person shall be subject to any punishment or any liability under the provisions of sections 206, 207, and 216, title 29, United States Code (the same being secs. 6, 7, and 16 of Public Law 718, 75th Cong., 3d sess.), on account of any act done or omitted to be done, payment made or omitted to be made, or time worked, in connection with minimum wages or maximum hours or penalties as defined or imposed by said sections 206, 207, and 216, prior to the effective date of these amendments to said act. The court in such action shall, in addition to any judgment awarded to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, allow a reasonable attorney's fee to be paid by the defendant and costs of the action."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

THE POLISH SITUATION

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, for the past 2 years I have been calling to the attention of the House, with what may have seemed monotonous insistence, the dangerous implications of the Polish situation. On January 17, 1945, and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to note the date, almost 2 years to the day from the so-called Polish elections, I expressed this doubt:

> Recent utterances of responsible statesmen, both here and abroad, particularly with respect to the future of Poland, have left our people bewildered, disheartened, and confused. They are bewildered, disheartened, and confused because to them it has appeared that the ideals for which their boys are fighting are in serious danger of being compromised. They are disturbed by the signs that the Allied leaders find it expedient to yield to necessity, that they find it to their best interests to sacrifice ideals to so-called practical necessity.

Several times since I have asked on the floor of the House that our State Department take more positive action in defense of the Yalta and Potsdam Agreements entered into by the United States, Great Britain, and Soviet Russia in behalf of free and unfettered elections in Poland.

As far back as February 12, 1946, I pointed a finger in the direction in which Polish events were moving. I quote from my address to the House on the joint anniversary of Abraham Lincoln and Thaddeus Kosciusko:

> On this two hundredth birthday of Thaddeus Kosciusko we Americans are enjoying the independence for which he so fiercely fought. One may question whether his own native land is enjoying the independence which he vainly fought to gain for it during his eventful life. True, Poland is now free and independent, but disquieting stories of political murders and Communist terrorism continue to leak out of that devastated land. Such is our American debt to Poland, the land of our benefactor's birth, that I strongly urge that we, as a nation, continue to exhibit the liveliest concern in the welfare of Poland. Under various international agreements, we are committed to guarantee free and unfettered elections in the liberated lands. I strongly urge that our State Department follow up Secretary Byrnes' remonstrances on the terrorism existing in Poland, and throw the great weight of America behind the fight of all true Poles for a truly free Poland.

The terrorism to which I referred and against which Secretary Byrnes remonstrated, continued, and our State Department failed at the very time when strong representations might have stopped it. The United States did not throw its great weight behind the fight of all true Poles for a truly free Poland.

The terrorism practiced by the Communist-dominated Warsaw regime continued. On May 3, the one hundred and fifty-fifth anniversary of the signing of the Third of May Constitution of Poland, I renewed my warnings. On that date I said:

> Tragically, however, it has not brought to the Polish people the blessings which our great document has brought to us. Even today, when Poland theoretically and according to the Potsdam agreements has a free and independent government of its own, the people of Poland, according to the few reports that filter out of that ravaged land, still do not enjoy the blessings of democracy.
> It would be easy for me to commemorate Polish Constitution Day by giving fulsome praise to the great Polish people for their centuries-long fight for political and religious freedom. It would be easy to count over the exploits of Polish heroes, both at home and abroad, but I feel that such words would be small comfort to the Polish people themselves in their present predicament. The greatest testimony of my esteem and the greatest contribution to their cause must, I feel, lie along other lines. I wish to make that contribution and express that esteem by calling the attention of the House to a current situation in which the future of Poland's true interests is deeply involved. * * *
> Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to developments which have already occurred and which seem to cast grave doubts upon the good faith of the regime which we propose to further strengthen by our loans and credits. I feel that I am serving the real interests of the Polish people by pointing an emphatic finger at these developments. Four days after Mr. Lange's letter, which apparently reassured our State Department and others who opposed the loan, there appeared a dispatch in the New York Times to which little attention has been paid. This dispatch from Warsaw revealed that Stanislaw Mikolajczyk and his Peasant Party went into open opposition and abstained from the vote of confidence when this year's budget was approved. The Peasant Party declared that the whole present session of the National Council has been utilized for an attack and a campaign of calumny against our party.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that this was the party which was taken into the government at the insistence of the United States to broaden its base by the addition of democratic elements not dominated by Soviet Russia.

The Peasant Party further charged the security police with unlawful arrests and detention and seizure of property, alleging, also, that their action endangered the liberty of citizens.

It is evident to me, Mr. Speaker, and should be to all the Members of the House, that the developments taking place now in Poland should be watched most carefully. What will it avail to have so-called free and unfettered elections in the fall if no one opposed to Soviet domination remains to vote? The pattern is evident. It has been followed many times before. The opposition is removed by all the various means which the Soviets know so well how to use. Then elections are held and the vote is announced as nearly unanimous. * * * If our Government is serious in its desire to see that free and unfettered elections are really held and proposes to use this loan as a means of insuring this objective, then there is one thing that must be done, and be done immediately. Our State Department should demand an investigation of the charges made by the Peasant Party and demand further that the Allied press enjoy full freedom at once to report to the world upon developments in Poland. This is the time—before the elections—which is all-important. The whole character of those elections is being determined now. If the Warsaw regime is sincere in giving its assurances in return for the loan, then it should not object to the fullest investigations of the Polish situation from this date to the holding of the elections.

I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that the American press indeed enjoyed full freedom to report to the world upon developments in Poland. Apparently it is enjoying that full freedom. That very fact should be the undoing of the present tyrannical regime; because reports from American press representatives show clearly that what I foretold during the past two years has, in fact, happened. The so-called free and unfettered elections will not take place. With unmitigated effrontery, the Warsaw regime, set up by the Allied Powers, has made such elections impossible. I need only quote in support of this statement, the dispatch written from Warsaw on January 2 by Sidney Gruson, the New York Times correspondent.

I hope the House will note the significant headline used by the Times. I quote:

ELECTION IN POLAND IS RIGGED BY FORCE—BANNING OF OPPOSITION LEADERS AND TERROR AMONG FOLLOWERS HELD TO PRECLUDE JUSTICE

(By Sydney Gruson)

WARSAW, January 2.—Mass arrests of members of the Polish Opposition Party (PSL), intimidation of anyone and everyone who might be unwilling to accept Communist leadership and the ban on the candidacy of some opposition leaders have reached such a point that voting on January 19 will be meaningless.

There is no other conclusion to be reached. It is obvious that the events of the last 6 weeks, no matter what happens on January 19, have precluded the possibility of obtaining anything like a free expression of the people's will.

The Communist leadership is prepared to crush Vice Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk's opposition, once and for all. Continued at its present pace, the unbridled terror let loose in the country, of which Mr. Mikolajczyk gave additional details today, may obviate the need for faking the ballot count, such as is generally believed to have occurred during the referendum last July.

DISSIDENT SOCIALIST BANNED

Terror and intimidation are not new. Now the authorities have begun on the candidates. The national electoral commission tonight voted 6 to 1 to remove Anthoni Zdanowski from the combined Socialist-Peasant list in Warsaw and Lodz, asserting that the prewar secretary of the Polish trade-unions had connections with the underground and as a Socialist leader had not been active enough against the Germans during the occupation.

M. Zdanowski is a member of the small dissident Socialist group led by Zygmund Zulowski, which has filed combined lists with the Peasants in five districts. These lists have been either partly of completely banned in two of the five districts. The electoral commission has also decided to ban Peasant Leaders Kazimirz Baginski, Stanislaw Mierzwa, and Stanislaw Kotek because they are in jail on charges of subversive activities.

After talking with government officials and neutral diplomats here, it is obvious also that Poland's leaders have decided to act this way partly because they feel certain that neither the United States nor Britain will withdraw recognition after the elections. The faint hints of such a possibility in recent British and American notes do not impress the men charged with running Poland's internal affairs.

The Communist paper Glos Luda pointed up the determination here to make the elections the last word in establishing the "democratic bloc's" authority by asserting that already 70 percent of the people entitled to vote in Silesia have signed up for the bloc.

"The democratic bloc must not be just victorious," Glos Luda said. "Its victory must be overwhelming to deliver the final blow to the allied forces of legal, half-legal and illegal reaction."

Mr. Mikolajczyk, at a press conference, gave another few instances of how this overwhelming victory is being assured. First of all, he reported, 104 PSL candidates are under arrest and the national electoral commission has rejected party appeal for their release "because it is a matter for the security authorities."

M. Mikolajczyk also reported the finding of the mutilated body of a candidate, Jan Malejko, in a field near his home in the district of Bydgoszcz. Although M. Mikolajczyk said there was no proof as to who had committed the murder, he left no question about his belief by telling that M. Malejko had been threatened by the security police unless he agreed to withdraw his candidacy. He was taken from his home one night by three men describing themselves as militiamen.

The rest of Mr. Mikolajczyk's talk to the press was what by now has become an old story: Arrests, disruption of Peasant party meetings, striking Peasant party supporters from voting lists, maltreatment of those detained and hindering of Peasants' district organizations.

"There was no peace for the peasants of Poland during the Christmas holidays," the Peasant party's daily communiqué said sadly.

TERROR ON BOTH SIDES

Government spokesmen categorically deny every charge of terror and intimidation made by M. Mikolajczyk. But the denials do not stand up against the personal observation of foreign correspondents here and reports from a majority of the diplomatic missions in Warsaw.

The Government has made much of the terror used by the underground. It is considerable. More than 20 of the bloc parties' election officials have already been murdered and 8 Communist workers were recently killed and mutilated on the highway near Warsaw in a particularly revolting crime.

The Gazeta Ludowa has so far failed to report the murder of the workmen and the Government press has charged that silence on the part of the Peasant press implies support of such action. M. Mikolajczyk today again condemned any kind of political violence, which his paper denounced editorially yesterday.

"Censorship has never allowed us to publish the news of the murders of our members," he said. "Must we repeat our condemnation in every case?"

Censorship has cracked down hard on the Gazeta Ludowa recently. It has blue-penciled every reference to arrests or intimidation and has given the newspaper's editors a nightmare of work refilling as much as three-quarters of the front page of a single edition. The paper is not allowed to appear with blank spaces denoting censorship.

There is still time, Mr. Speaker, for our State Department to redeem itself. Until now it has let the Polish situation slide along. As a matter of fact, the British have done far more in the way of remonstrance to vindicate the Yalta and Potsdam agreements than have we. It is time that we assumed our share of the burden which we willingly accepted.

There is still time, I say again, for our Government to exert every force at its disposal to ensure that the elections to be held on January 19 are actually free and unfettered. This will, I admit, necessitate immediate action, but such action is imperative if the smaller nations throughout the world are to have any confidence at all in the promises and pledges of the United States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a radio address and in the other to include another address.

THE LATE HONORABLE WILLIAM L. NELSON

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it is with the deepest regret that I announce the sudden death at his home in Columbia, Mo., on the day before the Congress assembled, of Hon. William L. Nelson who served in this body for 18 years.

He was a member of two of the important committees of the House, the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Rules, and left his imprint on vital legislation enacted by this body.

He had previously served as a member of the General Assembly of Missouri; as assistant secretary of agriculture for Missouri; was the author of numerous publications; and was one of the outstanding citizens of his State.

His wide circle of friends here in the House will learn with regret of his passing.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I learn of the passing of my predecessor, William L. Nelson. I knew him as my Congressman for 18 years and admired his untiring efforts. He built a reputation for hard work and diligent attention to the duties of his office. He gave of himself in faithful public service both in and out of Congress during the most productive years of his life.

I am sure that next to his devotion for his immediate family, his service in this body was his chief interest in life. He was beloved by many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and his memory will be cherished, especially by the older Members of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include part of a statement by Gen. Peyton C. Marsh and an editorial from the Washington Post.

THE LATE HONORABLE SOUTH TRIMBLE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, South Trimble, for 36 years the only nominee of the Democratic Party for Clerk of the House of Representatives, died at the age of 82 during our absence from Washington. He had for 24 years successfully fulfilled the arduous duties of his office with distinction. Mr. Trimble served his country throughout his life with outstanding ability and devotion. Venerable and beloved, his splendid public service endeared him to every Member of every Congress with whom he served. We have lost an able administrative assistant. I have lost a friend.

Mr. Trimble was born in Kentucky in April 1864. He exemplified the highest traits of the Kentucky gentleman. He grew younger with the passing years in his love for his native State. His fidelity to his friends—and they were innumerable—made him the object of affection. He never avoided political conflict, fighting hard, but clean, and leaving no bitterness. His kindness of heart and generosity of spirit gave him the understanding of the wise protagonist, able to smile in victory and defeat.

South Trimble was above all an American, possessed of the highest ideals, a man of learning, scholarly, courteous, and distinguished. He carved for himself a name among the great names who have served in the House of Representatives. He discharged every duty of his office efficiently, and with fidelity and honor.

Mr. Trimble witnessed many dramatic events on Capitol Hill. None, however, equaled his experience as speaker of the Kentucky House of Representatives in 1900. In that year the Kentucky gubernatorial election was so closely contested that the legislature designated Mr. Trimble to pick from a bowl containing many slips of paper the names of three men who would investigate the election and decide the outcome. Mr. Trimble drew the names of three judges sponsored by his own, the Democratic, party. The Democratic Governor was elected, but was assassinated as he was about to take the oath of office. Mr. Trimble led a group of legislators to the death bed of the Democratic candidate, William Goebels, and enabled him to take oath of office immediately before he died. This historic incident had many repercussions in our national life. The name of South Trimble became a household word throughout Kentucky. In that year he was elected to Congress and served as a Member of the House until 1906, when he decided not to seek reelection.

Little can be added to what has previously been said on the floor of the House to South Trimble in salutation and congratulation while he was alive. Capitol Hill has lost a sage counselor and adviser on all congressional and governmental matters. We all will miss South Trimble.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WORLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOWELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

THE SUGAR SITUATION

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am taking the floor at this time to discuss a matter about which millions of our people are deeply concerned, and about which a great many statements, requests, letters, and inquiries are coming to Washington. It pertains to the domestic supply of sugar, and particularly as it relates to household consumers.

We have to bear in mind, as legislators, that the present sugar program of the administration and of the Congress and of the Government generally has been running since about 1934; as a matter of fact, we could date it back of that a little if we wanted to, but as far as legislation is concerned we may place it about 1934. Since then, and since the inception of the reciprocal trade-agreements programs we have had four successive reductions in the tariff on sugar which comes into the United States.

Some of you may have forgotten or overlooked the fact that the tariff duties applied in two ways. Cuba, operating under the reciprocal trade-agreement program, enjoyed one duty and offshore areas—that is, foreign countries other than Cuba—had to pay a higher duty under the historical tariff assessments of this Government. So both the foreign duties other than Cuba have been reduced and also the Cuban duties.

If you can imagine yourself as an investor in sugar properties, and I refer particularly to raw-sugar mills such as you find in Florida, Louisiana, Texas, and the beet-sugar mills such as you find in some 16 or 17 of our States—I do not refer to the seacoast refineries which are no more than laundry machines for the purpose of washing the molasses out of raw sugars—if you are an investor in sugar mills which produce raw sugar located on the continent of the United States you would be concerned about the reduction in the tariff duties on raw sugar coming into the United States because that raw sugar would directly compete with the raw sugar which is produced in the beet fields and the sugar-cane fields of this country.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I know the gentleman from Michigan has made a thorough study of this sugar situation. What is going to be the result in the not distant future so far as the American people securing the amount of sugar that they need without being regulated as to the amount they can use?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall tell you about that particular phase of it later. Let me go on now for a moment.

With four successive reductions in the duty on sugar within a few years, as an investor you would naturally be concerned about your present investment and you would not be too anxious to put further additional funds in an expansion of a business which the administration had at least indicated it expected to retire from operation in the United States. So in the last 12 or 15 years we have had no expansion of consequence in the productive facilities of sugar, but we have had a great expansion in two other things, namely, population and the monetary power to buy sugar and try to satisfy a sweet tooth, if you please.

In addition to that general set-up I have just stated, we have the domestic sugar industry which consists of the beet and cane industries here on the continent plus the Hawaiian sugar industry, plus the Puerto Rican and the Virgin Islands sugar industry. Those are areas under the American flag where citizens of the United States live. Cuba is a foreign country; the Philippines is a foreign country; so neither of those areas is included within the domestic sugar industry. They simply cannot be. But always remember that Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands are the same to this Congress as are the beet fields of the various States and the cane fields of Louisiana, Florida, and Texas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman, I think, will recall that when the Philippine trade bill was passed in the last Congress we did then, with the binding effect of a treaty, give to the Philippine Islands for a long period of time the same portion of our domestic sugar market that they had been enjoying.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true, I believe.

Mr. CURTIS. That is putting a further obstacle in the way of extension of sugar production in this country.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In addition to these reductions in duties, there is imposed on the sugar industry marketing quotas. That is, the whole market of the United States was allocated a certain percentage to Cuba, a certain percentage to the Philippines, a certain percentage to the domestic beet-sugar industry and the sugarcane industry, and so on down the line. That tended to further restrict the production of sugar and to further restrict the expansion of productive facilities on sugar to the market allocation, rather than depending on competition.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. If we give the domestic producers, meaning the producers who are American citizens in this country and in those offshore areas, a chance to operate, expand, and profit, are we capable of producing all the sugar we need in this country?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If you ever establish a certain definite policy and lay it down cold-blooded so that the investor would know what to depend upon, and what you were going to do, of course, you could produce the sugar we need, which is for domestic use and exports of sweets, say 9,000,000 tons of sugar per annum. Of course, in such a plan you will largely care for Cuba. In 1946 about 5,450,000 tons, in round figures, were allocated for consumption, and therefore you were short of supply. Now we are going to continue short on sugar for some time to come, may I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, we must not overlook this fact when we are trying to develop our own sugar industry, that during 1938–39 we paid the sugar industry in this country $49,000,000 for not raising sugar, and then we came along about 1941 and we started to pay the sugar industry $58,000,000 for raising sugar. Now we want to establish a policy in this country, if we are going to protect the sugar industry, so that we will not have to reach down into the Treasury and take out $58,000,000 for subsidies. We want to be careful from now on, because the responsibility is yours and mine.

Further, may I call your attention to the fact that we are about $259,000,000,000 in the red. The President said yesterday we are going to balance the budget. That is the first time in 15 years that I have heard anybody down in the White House say he was going to do it. Now we want to help him do that very thing, but at the same time we want to help the sugar industry of this country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MICHENER). The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Is not this also a thing that has affected the supply of sugar? The price of sugar has been held down, as everyone knows, by OPA. Naturally, the price of sugar beets and sugarcane was held down to such a degree that it was not profitable to raise sugar beets and sugarcane, or as profitable as it was to raise other crops. Consequently we have not had the added production of sugarcane and sugar beets as we have of other products, and hence we have had a small crop, and because of that we have no sugar.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Three or four things have happened: A reduction in the tariff duty, the establishment of your marketing quotas, and the initiation of price control which damped down the production of sugar, because other competitive crops could be more profitably grown. Further, we have entered into some twelve or fifteen basic international agreements since January 1940, which impose upon us more or less the responsibility to share with the other nations of the earth such sugar as we do get. Now how can we give the housewives of this country the sugar they want?

Mr. JENSEN. In order to get production of sugar we must have the price of sugar raised; is that not a fact?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, you are going to have to do some other things, too.

Mr. JENSEN. But that is one of the things.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; that is certainly one of them. What we have to do as a Congress, if we want to answer the prayers of the housewives for sugar, is to start to put into operation those things which permit sugar to be produced. This is because we have certainly had a sufficient number of lessons to teach us that we cannot legislate foodstuffs into the kitchens of this country. It has got to be produced. Here you have a shortage of sugar throughout the whole world. It is a world shortage, and I do not mean maybe. There is no fooling about it.

What can we do? Let your price go up until producers come back into the field. That is number one. Unless you do that by the planting time this spring you do not get the sugar beets and the sugarcane planted for next fall's harvesting. That is the reason I am making this statement today. This is something that runs with the seasons. If you go until June next before you make any changes, then figure 18 months before you get the increased quantity of sugar. What do I mean by an increased quantity of sugar? I mean what these housewives want. I do not mean 5 pounds next year, I mean to fix it so that the farmer's wife and the city wife can go to the grocery store and buy the sugar they want when they get ready to buy it. That is what they want. They are not going to fuss about whether they pay 7 cents a pound or 12 cents a pound. They want the sugar, so as to put the cookies in the lunch basket that the kiddies take to school; meet their canning and other requirements as in years past. That is what they are after, and it is up to this Congress to do something about that. It is a big program, and we might as well get started on it as quickly as possible.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman speaks about the shortage of sugar and how housewives need the sugar. They surely needed sugar during the Christmas holidays to make the cakes and cookies.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They need it now, too.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman no doubt has read ads in the New York Journal of Commerce by importers of sugar like John M. Schlein, who advertised all the sugar that the housewives or anybody else wanted, in hundred-pound sacks, shipped anywhere in the world except the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. That is due to the marketing quota and the restrictions.

Mr. STEVENSON. Could the gentleman explain how that could happen?

Mr. CRAWFORD. You have rationing of sugar in the United States under the OPA. You can have your pocket full of money but you have to have a sugar stamp to get some. That fellow cannot import 100-pound bags and sell freely to you just now because you have to have stamps to get the 100 pounds of sugar. That is what you are up against.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I can tell the gentleman how he can get sugar; in the black market.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Many of us are very deeply interested in this subject and very much interested in what the gentleman has to say about it. There is one inquiry I should like to make. As I understand the gentleman, he is in favor of a situation whereby the housewives and those who need the sugar will be able to secure the sugar. The gentleman mentioned also that even if it got up to 12 cents a pound they would not be able to get the sugar. Suppose sugar got to an unusually high price, would not that indicate there was a scarcity? If there was a scarcity, how would that indicate they could get the sugar?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If it goes to 12 or 15 or 50 cents a pound, that in itself does not indicate a scarcity, because you have got just what the market offers, and no more. There is a world scarcity of sugar now. Higher free prices would bring forth production and the scarcity would vanish as it has on meats and other food items.

So, we should rid ourselves of sugar price controls, sugar-marketing quotas, positively and permanently establishing a minimum tariff of $1.50 per 100 pounds of sugar against Cuba and get back to the expansion of sugar production under the American flag. All this if we want an ample supply of sugar.

HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure all my colleagues on this side of the aisle will be very much gratified at the announcement I am privileged to make, and I am certain also that all of his friends on the other side of the aisle will be glad also. I have finally prevailed upon my old friend and coworker, JOHN McCORMACK, to accept the place of whip of the minority. For 6 years he and I have been coworkers in the leadership of the House. Since the majority passed to the other side and my colleagues on this side have imposed upon me the duty of the leadership, I am proud that I will have him as my consultant and coworker in the leadership of the minority, as I have had in the majority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PORTAL-TO-PORTAL PAY SUITS

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the filing of many suits for alleged overtime compensation—popularly known as portal-to-portal pay—has focused the attention of the country on a problem which should have the immediate attention of the Congress.

The amounts claimed in actions already begun run into billions of dollars. In view of the number of employees now subject to certain Federal statutes, the final amount may reach fantastic proportions and do serious damage to our entire economic structure.

Certain laws are being interpreted and enforced without regard to long-standing practices and customs in the particular industry—heretofore considered to be a part of every agreement of employment. In some cases this is being done in spite of specific agreement to the contrary and, as a result, the entire philosophy of collective bargaining is being jeopardized. These new regulations are given a retroactive application in spite of good faith attempts to comply with the then existing regulations and practices. The failure of Congress to enact proper statutes of limitation permits the litigation of claims arising many years in the past and covering transactions about which satisfactory evidence is no longer available.

These suits call for the payment of amounts equal to three times the regular hourly wage, plus attorney fees and costs. Some employers, unable to pay the amounts claimed, may be forced into bankruptcy. The uncertainties, the protracted litigation will seriously retard production at a time when maximum production is greatly needed. The flow of interstate commerce will be retarded. In the long run, the results will be detrimental to all.

Employees are learning that the wages to which they are entitled depend, not upon bargains made with their employers, but upon fortuitous and unexpected circumstances. Definitions of worktime, left by Congress largely to employer and employee, are being drawn within the orbit of administrative regulation and court decision.

The Government too has a stake in these suits. Some of the judgments obtained will be proper charges against the National Treasury under wartime cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts. It was learned last year in the hearings before the House Judiciary Committee that additional billions may thus be added to the cost of the war.

This problem received consideration in the last Congress. On March 28, 1945, I introduced H. R. 2788, a bill to provide a statute of limitation in certain cases. On October 22, 1945, this bill was reported favorably by that committee with certain amendments. Thereafter the bill passed both the House and Senate in slightly different forms but failed of final enactment.

Today I am introducing another bill to deal with this problem. Important features of the proposed legislation are as follows:

First. Hereafter the actions covered by the bill must be commenced within 1 year after the cause of action accrued.

Second. Causes of action accrued prior to the effective date of the act, and not barred by any applicable statute of limitations, may be commenced within 90 days after such effective date. Recovery under any cause of action which has already accrued would be limited to 1 year.

Third. No recovery would be permitted for any period during which the employer was complying with the law as then interpreted and enforced by the enforcement authorities.

Fourth. In the absence of fraud or duress, a settlement or release of a claim or cause of action would be a defense to the suit.

Fifth. The court may include as part of the judgment an attorney fee which shall not exceed 5 percent of the amount recovered and in no event in excess of $5,000.

Sixth. The burden of proof shall rest upon the party maintaining such action and the failure of the defendant to produce records, not required by published regulations authorized by statute, shall give rise to no prejudicial inference affecting liability or the measure or extent of damages.

Seventh. Jurisdiction is withdrawn from the courts to pass on these claims except under the conditions specified, or to nullify employment contracts already performed by giving retroactive effect to decisions such as the portal-to-portal decisions, or to award liquidated damages except where the violation of law was willful.

Eighth. This act would apply to all such acts or causes of action arising under or pursuant to section 2 of the act of June 30, as amended—the Public Contracts Act (41 U. S. C. 36); section 16 (b) of the act of June 25, 1948—the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U. S. C. 216 (b)); and section 3 (b) of the act of August 30, 1935, as amended—the Davis-Bacon Act (40 U. S. C. 276 (a) (2)). Any parts of said acts inconsistent with any provision of this act are to such extent repealed.

This bill would not interfere with the power of the Federal Government to enforce provisions of the law by proceedings for injunctions or by criminal prosecution. It is not designed to aid the willful violator. Its purpose is to prevent the chaos which now threatens us because of interpretations which would nullify and remake transactions long since completed. It would remove many uncertainties now plaguing both employer and employee. It would foster and protect interstate commerce. It would protect the Public Treasury from the serious drain of this new form of windfall.

At some future date, there will no doubt be opportunity to discuss the constitutional questions involved. Permit me at this time to invite attention to the following general propositions:

First. Congress has the power and the duty to regulate interstate commerce and matters affecting such commerce. In exercising this power, Congress should act in the interest of all. All contracts which have been or will be made are subject to this broad power.

Second. Congress has power to regulate the jurisdiction of the courts. No person has a vested property right in a Federal statute or in any right of action or remedy under such statute. Just as Congress may repeal any law, it may modify the remedies provided and direct the courts to apply the remedies under the conditions laid down by the Congress. It lies within its power to determine whether, in the application of penalties or liabilities provided by statute, decisions of the courts should be given retroactive or merely prospective effect.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman has made a very interesting statement. I have noticed some writers have suggested that this problem of portal-to-portal pay might be reached by taking away the jurisdiction of the courts to hear such cases. If I understand the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, his remedy varies from that, in that it would provide that proof that the employer had followed the law and regulations as required by the Government would constitute a defense to the suit.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct. I do not think it would be advisable to take away all jurisdiction of the courts to hear questions under the Fair Labor Standards Act, because there are certain violations for which suit should be maintained.

The general purpose of this bill is to lay down the conditions under which the court may entertain jurisdiction, and under which the court may render judgment. It would protect the employer in three general classes of cases. First, he would be protected where his conduct had been in accord with regulations existing at the time.

Second, where his conduct had been in accord with a collective-bargaining agreement in operation at that time.

And, third, where his conduct had been in accord with the established custom and practices of the industry at the time.

Mr. CURTIS. I believe the gentleman's proposal is sound.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I recall very clearly, Mr. Speaker, the bill that was introduced and later passed in the Seventy-ninth Congress concerning this very subject. The events which have taken place in the courts since that time have justified some of the apprehensions that were expressed during the course of the debate on that bill.

I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he has considered the constitutional question of whether the legislation he has now introduced in any way violates the constitutional provisions relating to the sanctity of contracts and the obligation of contracts? Has the gentleman given that any thought or consideration, and has he any comment to make on it?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Yes; I have given it considerable thought, but it would be a rather long subject to make a detailed explanation of right now.

The general philosophy I have in mind is this—and there is precedent for it: Congress has the right to regulate interstate commerce. That is a power to which all contracts are subject.

The constitutional provision which it may be claimed this law violates is the due process clause that property cannot be taken without due process of law. Let me cite to the gentleman the well-known gold cases, where Congress in its authority to regulate money and fix the value thereof was held to have the right to interfere with contracts made long before the law was passed. We did substantially the same thing when we passed the insurance bill during the last session, where in effect we gave a moratorium of 2 years on the bringing of certain suits which had then accrued under the antitrust laws. I believe we are on sound constitutional grounds in this approach.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. This is a very vexatious but important question in which I am greatly interested. Was there anything in the message on yesterday precommending that attention be paid to this matter?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I do not recall anything.

Mr. GIFFORD. I simply suggest that I do not know how much legislation might be approved if passed.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Not being a prophet I would not be able to answer that.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION As I understand the gentleman, one of his proposals is to uphold and protect the sanctity of contracts

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION. And his second proposition is to protect the citizen where he has followed the law and regulations issued under the direction of an act of Congress.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MICHENER). The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ON THE STATE OF THE UNION

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, how disappointing must be the President's speech on the state of the Union to the millions who are looking forward to a better day as a result of the recent election. Hardly a word of encouragement did he offer for the solution of the very pressing problem of strikes and their accompaniments. The President recommends some slight relief such as the prevention of jurisdictional strikes. He says the secondary boycott is an unjustifiable practice "when used to further jurisdictional disputes or to compel employers to violate the National Labor Relations Act." Then he adds:

> Not all secondary boycotts are unjustified. We must judge them on the basis of their objectives. For example, boycotts intended to protect wage rates and working conditions should be distinguished from those in furtherance of jurisdictional disputes. The structure of industry sometimes requires unions, as a matter of self-preservation, to extend the conflict beyond a particular employer. There should be no blanket prohibition against boycotts. The appropriate goal is legislation which prohibits secondary boycotts in pursuance of unjustifiable objectives, but does not impair the union's right to preserve its own existence.

For the first time, so far as I know, the political forces in control of the Federal Government make it a policy to sanction and uphold boycotts.

About the only remedy the President suggests for alleviating strikes is more political intervention in the relations between employers and employees. Political intervention in this field is responsible for much the greater portion of the falsely called labor-management strife. To cure this situation the President proposes to apply more of the same noxious substance which caused the trouble, more political machinery and meddling.

Not one word did he say about the billions of dollars' worth of property that is being destroyed by the policy of the political machine in control of the Government in sanctioning and encouraging strikes.

How depressing all this must be to the wage-earners, both unionized and nonunionized, as well as the public, for each and all of these groups must bear the evil consequences of this antisocial policy. Who but the working people and the poor were the first to suffer from the coal strike and the last to be benefited by its discontinuance?

There is in the President's speech the same kind of promise to balance the budget that has characterized Presidential protestations in the last 14 years relating to this matter. In one breath the President says the budget will be balanced and that there will even be a small surplus to apply on the Federal debt. In the next breath he launches into the advocacy of further and extensive socialization of the economy, in the fields of medicine, housing, agriculture, and industry in general, involving projected costs running into many many billions.

The President is also silent about the giant bureaucracy that is eating out the substance of the working people who actually produce the necessaries of life and which is tearing down the whole fabric of free enterprise and dragging this Nation of ours into the mire of communism.

Apparently the President sees nothing significant in the upheaval that took place in the recent election.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement on the subject of the statehood of Hawaii.

ELECTRICAL RECORDING OF VOTES OF THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PRICE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution that provides for the electrical recording of the votes taken in the House. We have heard much recently about reforms in the operation of Congress and how the general public are looking forward to the improvements that are to follow the so-called streamlining of Congress. To me it seems a pity that we are about to leave the job only about half done.

In the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses, the roll was called 789 times. I believe you will all agree with me that a minimum of 20 minutes was consumed on each roll call and perhaps 30 minutes would be more nearly correct. But let us put it at the minimum. This means that 263 hours were used by Members of the House in the last 4 years, yes, 32 days and 7 hours—that is 8-hour days—or 6 weeks and 2 days—that is 5-day weeks—have been consumed doing nothing but calling of the roll. If you multiply this by 435 Members you would really have some lost man-hours.

Besides the wasting of the time, there is an angle that is far more important and that is the lack of time given by Members of Congress to the business of enacting laws, which should be our real job. As we all know, the respect of the people of the country is given a terrible nose dive when they come to the gallery of the House for a visit.

It is hard to convince the people when only a few Members are on the floor that the majority of the House Members are not sadly neglecting their duty. With the votes being recorded electrically, we all would be on hand when we were needed, and the general public would have their confidence and respect increased for the highest lawmaking body of our land. I hope every Member of this House will insist on my resolution getting a hearing in order that we may work out a better procedure which will reflect credit on this body and result in better laws being enacted.

A DEFENSE OF PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the attack made on President Truman's message by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

I heard the President's message. On the whole it was splendid. There were things in it with which I probably did not agree; but on the whole it was excellent.

Let me remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] that this is the Congress of the United States. It is our duty to pass legislation to correct whatever evils may prevail. That legislation is sent to the other end of the Avenue for the President's approval or disapproval, and even if he disapproves it we have the right to pass it over his veto.

The gentleman from Ohio called the President to task for not doing something about strikes. I want to say to him that Harry Truman, as President of the United States, stopped the recent coal strike and prevented John L. Lewis from freezing the American people into submission.

President Truman's popularity has increased tremendously within the last few weeks.

There are many things about Harry Truman that commend him to the average American.

In the first place, he is a real American himself. He embraces no foreign ideology. He speaks our language.

Then, too, with the exception of Warren G. Harding, he is the first President of the United States since McKinley who ever served a single day in either House of Congress. Therefore, he knows how to deal with individual Members of the House and Senate.

Again, he is a Christian gentleman; a man whose heart is in the right place; and he is not too egotistical to change his mind when convinced that he is wrong.

He has courage, and he manifested that courage just before the Christmas holidays when this brazen attempt was made to force a coal strike on the American people, just as he manifested his courage on the battlefield during the First World War.

He has kept the common touch better than any other man who ever served as President, in my opinion, since the War Between the States. If you doubt that, go down and talk to him or watch him in his contacts with others.

I am not agreeing with President Truman on everything, and he knows it. When we get together we sometimes have a friendly quarrel about the things on which we disagree. But he is always willing to hear the other side.

I agree with what the gentleman from Ohio says about communism. There is not a man in America who is more willing to drive communism from American soil than I am. But Harry Truman is not a Communist. He has no sympathy with communism in America.

We have a tremendous task before us to pull this country together and to get it back on the beam, so to speak, to promote the happiness and prosperity of the American people and to protect our country, as George Washington said, against the insidious wiles of those elements who come pretending to be our friends and who have their hands out for something they want us to give them.

We have a tremendous task, and I for one am willing to give President Truman the benefit of the doubt. I believe as we go along even my distinguished friend from Ohio will agree that Harry Truman is doing his best to restore America to her proper place in world affairs and to promote the peace, the happiness, and the prosperity of the American people.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Does the gentleman take what I said as an attack on Harry Truman or as a criticism of his speech?

Mr. RANKIN. I took it as an attack on his message, and I thought it was premature, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio.

I have taken more abuse, and I am taking more abuse now, from the un-American elements through this country than any other man who has ever served in the Congress of the United States, because I have dared to stand for what I conceived to be American principles.

I have no apology for defending my country, as best I could, against the subversive elements throughout the land. Any man who thinks more of his political life, or of his personal security, than he does of his country in times like these has no business in the Congress of the United States.

Whether other Members agree with me or not, I propose to follow that policy which in my opinion will best serve this great Republic and bring to the American people the greatest measure of peace, happiness, and prosperity throughout the years to come; and I believe that Harry Truman feels just as I do on the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

HON. THOMAS E. DEWEY

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, since we have begun this early discussing Presidential candidates for 1948, I feel that it is not untimely for me to rise in the House today to discuss other possibilities. I believe Harry Truman will be a candidate for President in 1948 on the Democratic ticket. I believe the Republican Party will also have a candidate for President in 1948. Up in New York State we have an excellent man. The Governor of New York State just won by one of the largest pluralities accorded anybody who ever ran for a State-wide office. It is my frank opinion that Mr. Dewey's vote-getting ability will put him in good stead in the Presidential year 1948. I feel it is accurate to say that his chances of becoming President are the best of any man in the country as of the present time. So while we are discussing Presidential possibilities, and I assume the gentleman from Missisippi was referring to Mr. Truman as a possible candidate for reelection, I think it is fair to mention our governor up in New York State.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know whether or not President Truman will be a candidate for President in 1948, but I was speaking of him as President of the United States, with the grave responsibilities he now bears.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Nevertheless, this is the year 1947, and we would be barren of serious thinking if we did not at this moment here in the Congress and throughout the country, begin to think about who is going to be our next President.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Of course, the gentleman recalls that we produced his Governor in Michigan.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. That is very true, and I think it is a timely remark. I thank the gentleman for it.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield further, let me suggest to my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] that a candidate for President who starts out running this early usually runs to a "cold trail" even before the nomination period.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. To my knowledge, the Governor of New York has made no reference to any interest in becoming a Presidential candidate. I think I recall that he has even indicated in the public press that he is not a candidate. I have simply taken it upon myself at a time when Presidential candidates are being discussed, and I believe it is both my duty and my prerogative to mention the name of a distinguished possibility. Governor Dewey certainly is Presidential material. Personally, I believe he is just as sure of being the next President as it is certain that we are here in this Chamber at this moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended for 5 minutes, if he so desires and if there is no objection on the part of those who may have special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. Speaking of vote-getting ability, there was evidence throughout the country on November 5 of the ability of certain candidates to get votes. Many of the Members of this House showed they had this proclivity. Many of my friends on the Republican side established all-time-record majorities. They showed that the people in their districts were solidly behind them and that they were candidates of whom the people could be proud. They were interested in the rights of the people and the primary objectives of good government. There were many candidates throughout the country who did that. Yet, I know of no man who ran for public office, whether it was for the House of Representatives or the Senate of the United States or for the governorship of any State, who did a better job of piling up convincing pluralities than did our own Governor.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. WORLEY. As a Democrat, I would be the last one to say that Mr. Dewey is absolutely devoid of accomplishments. As a Texas Democrat, I am willing to concede that Mr. Dewey has accomplished some great things in his life. In fact, his greatest accomplishment is that he married a Texas girl, which is not an easy thing to do for the average Republican.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I imagine his statement is absolutely accurate. But I will say I believe the sun is rising for the Republican Party. I believe the opportunities for good government and for embarking on a program of progress and good will and raising the standards of living for the American people are in sight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WORLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father of our souls, grant to the Members and the officers of this body a sacred moment of quiet ere they take up the duties of the day. Turn their thoughts to Thee, and open their hearts to Thy Spirit, that they may have wisdom in their decisions, understanding in their thinking, love in their attitudes, and mercy in their judgments.

Let them not think, when this prayer is said, that their dependence upon Thee is over, and forget Thy counsels for the rest of the day.

Rather from these moments of heart-searching may there come such a sweetness of disposition that all may know that Thou art in this place. From this holy interlude may there flow light and joy and power that will remain with them until night shall bring Thy whispered benediction, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

So help us all this day, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 6, 1947, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

RESIGNATION OF HON. JAMES F. BYRNES, SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to express my deep regret at the resignation of Secretary Byrnes. It was my privilege to serve with him in the Senate and to work with him very closely on the Committee on Appropriations and the Special Committee on Unemployment Relief, where I developed the greatest admiration for his remarkable intellectual powers. I am sorry on personal grounds that his health is not so good as we would all like it to be, and I hope that the well-earned rest to which he looks forward will restore him completely. It is a great pity that the country should lose his unique knowledge of foreign affairs, his sure understanding of American opinion, and the intelligence, courage, and idealism with which he carried forward his great task. I wish for him all possible health and happiness.

If we have to lose Secretary Byrnes, it is good to see that he is being replaced by a man of such high quality as General Marshall. It was my privilege to see a great deal of General Marshall's work at first hand when I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and subsequently during the war. He combines the traits of a great soldier and statesman. I look forward to working with him and pledge him my cooperation.

ASSIGNMENT OF DEMOCRATIC SENATORS TO COMMITTEES

Mr. WHITE obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the day of the last session it was necessary for me to withdraw the nominations of minority members of the standing committees because of a slight mistake made by the steering committee which made it necessary to rearrange three or four names. The list has now been completed, and I move that the Senate confirm the selection of the list, which I send to the desk, of the minority members of the standing committees of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish to have the list read?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would be well to read it; it will not take long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The list will be read.

The list of the committee assignments of Senators of the minority was read, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

RESIGNATION OF HON. JAMES F. BYRNES AND NOMINATION OF GEN. GEORGE C. MARSHALL TO BE SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before we proceed with the morning hour, as in executive session I ask that the nomination of the new Secretary of State be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will state the nomination.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George C. Marshall, of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As in executive session, the nomination is before the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I deeply regret the sudden resignation of Secretary of State Byrnes. If his health requires this release from his heavy and difficult public burdens, he has richly earned the right to retire with all the honors that a grateful country can bestow upon him. But it can only be with a sense of deepest national loss that his country greets his departure.

Secretary Byrnes has been an able, efficient, courageous Secretary of State in the finest American tradition. He has relentlessly defended American ideals in crises where they required his indomitable loyalties. Those of us who have been privileged to work with him in the white heat of international contacts on the diplomatic front can testify, out of our hearts, to the patience, the firmness, the genius, the vision, and the faith which he has dedicated to these tasks. He has maintained the dignity, the honor, and the rights of the United States. He has made a magnificent contribution to the welfare of his country and to the peace of a better world. I salute him with affection and respect. I hail him as a very great American.

General Marshall will be welcomed by his countrymen as Secretary Byrnes' successor. He will bring to his assignment a stout heart, a shining integrity, a rich experience, and a lifetime of dedication to his country. He has always had the total confidence of Congress, as well as that of all his military and civilian colleagues, at home and abroad.

Now, Mr. President, since this sudden and unusual interruption in the State Department's personnel undoubtedly is causing speculation all around the world, I think it is highly important that the Senate of the United States, continuing to pursue what has been an effective bipartisan foreign policy, should make it perfectly clear immediately that there is no interruption to this unity by the episode to which I refer.

The majority of the Senate has determined by a rule that all nominations hereafter, regardless of what position or what personnel may be involved, shall always go to committee. I am prepared to recognize that procedure, although it would be inconceivable to me that it were necessary under the present circumstances.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am asking that the nomination of General Marshall be referred to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and I ask unanimous consent that the committee be permitted to sit during the session of the Senate this afternoon, such consent being required by the new La Follette act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection to the request, it is so ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before I take my seat I should like to ask the members of the new Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to gather at 12:30 o'clock in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee room.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has already voiced not only his own sentiments but those of the Senate, and, I believe, the feeling of the country, in expressing his regret that Secretary of State Byrnes has felt it necessary to retire from the high and responsible position which he has occupied with such distinction and in which he has rendered such illustrious service.

Mr. President, Secretary Byrnes has had a most unusual career. Coming to the House of Representatives when a very young man, he served there for a number of years in the responsible position of member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Later he was elected to the United States Senate. Senators know with what efficiency and with what rare ability he performed the responsible duties which devolved on him as a Member of this body.

Subsequently he was appointed by the President a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, from which position he resigned to become Economic Stabilizer, and to fill other responsible positions in the executive department of the Government. When Edward R. Stettinius, Jr. retired as Secretary of State, Mr. Byrnes was chosen by the President to succeed him. The duties of Mr. Byrnes as Secretary of State were of transcendent importance and most difficult. At times the discouragement which faced him and all of us was so great that it appeared as though it would be impossible to write the treaties with Italy and other satellite nations which were finally consummated. Along with others, it was my pleasure and honor to serve with and to be associated with him in London, Paris, and New York in these delicate negotiations and in connection with the work of the United Nations. The Secretary of State showed rare skill and magnificent ability. Of course, he represented the views and interests of the people of the United States, which he presented forcefully and aggressively. He was marvelously successful in bringing about the negotiation and drafting of treaties which were in large measure entirely satisfactory to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, when one like Secretary Byrnes leaves the public service there is a great loss, not only to the service itself but to the people of the United States. It is particularly unfortunate at this time, when we are only halfway through the making of the peace treaties, that we should lose the Secretary, who has had such a marvelous experience, who, by reason of his background, was so well fitted to meet the tasks which will face us with respect to the treaties with Germany, with Japan, and with Austria.

Mr. President, Secretary Byrnes leaves behind him a great record. The people of the United States will send to him in his retirement expression of their high admiration, their affection, and their deep personal regard.

I have been associated with Secretary Byrnes almost 30 years. I served with him in the House of Representatives. I served with him here in the Senate, and served with him, as I have already suggested, on some diplomatic missions. He will leave in the annals of his country an illustrious and shining record of high duties nobly, honorably, and courageously performed, of great personal ability, of devotion to the public welfare, and of patriotic approach to all the questions with which he dealt.

Mr. President, General Marshall, a man of fine character and of great military distinction, is highly regarded by the country and by the Senate of the United States; but, in view of the fact that his nomination has already been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I shall reserve any further comment respecting him at this time.

I strike hands with Secretary Byrnes on his departure, and wish for him restored health, renewed strength, and all the good things that a grateful Republic and a beneficent Creator may bestow upon him.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to join in the words of commendation which have been expressed with respect to Secretary Byrnes. I say that, notwithstanding the fact that I have not always believed that the policy enunciated or followed by the Government of the United States during the tenure of Secretary Byrnes was the best policy to serve the peace and to promote the well-being and the security of the United States and the world. However, I know of no man who could have threaded his way through the difficult labyrinthian passages of the recent past better than has Secretary of State Byrnes. He is a man of rare ability, of exceptional tact and capacity, a man who is as much the master of the legislative processes and the field of negotiation as any man of whom I have knowledge. He is a great patriot, a man deeply rooted in the soil and in the traditions of this country, a man truly wedded to democratic sentiment and spirit; and he has withal laid a strong foundation for the peace and security of mankind.

I reluctantly see him depart from his high office. I think it is most fitting that Time magazine has just extolled Secretary Byrnes and honored him by placing him on the cover of that magazine as "the man of the year."

I am one of those who also regret his passing into private life. I am not at all sure that Secretary Byrnes will remain in private life, however. He has always been called upon by his country and his President in a moment of need and great crisis, and I am sure that if his Government requires his further services as a public servant he will respond to the call. Secretary Byrnes goes into temporary retirement carrying with him not only the gratitude of the country but the affectionate good wishes of an innumerable host of friends.

ECONOMIC REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Joint Committee on the Economic Report:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 8, 1947.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I am presenting herewith my Economic Report to the Congress, as required under the Employment Act of 1946.

In preparing this report I have had the advice and assistance of the Council of Economic Advisers, members of the Cabinet, and heads of independent agencies.

Respectfully,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me make inquiry of the Chair. Just as I was entering the Chamber I heard the Chair announce that the Economic Report of the President had been referred. Let me inquire to what committee the report was referred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, created by the Employment Act of 1946.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this report and the President's message of the other day made reference to the report of the Temporary National Economic Committee, which was filed with the Senate in March of 1941, I desire, first of all, under the order of the introduction of bills, to introduce a bill amending the Clayton Act. It was one of the recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee, and it is one of the recommendations of the Economic Report of the President. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which is the committee which has jurisdiction over the antitrust laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 104) to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730), introduced by Mr. O'MAHONEY, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPRINTING OF FINAL REPORT OF TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the final report of the TNEC is one of the documents of that Committee which has had a very wide circulation throughout the United States. The Superintendent of Documents advises me that the general public has purchased more of the hearings, monographs, and reports of that Committee than those of any other committee in the entire history of the Congress of the United States. The general public has paid approximately $80,000 for these various documents. The supply of the final report of the Committee, which has been in demand ever since it was filed in 1941, has now been almost completely exhausted. The Superintendent of Documents advised me this morning that approximately 4,600 copies were printed—there have been two printings—and that there now remain only about 30 copies in that office. The Senate document room advised me this morning that the demand has been so great that there are left less than 20 copies of the report.

I feel that in the circumstances this report should be reprinted. As originally published it contained not only the report itself, but the verbatim testimony submitted by those who made recommendations for inclusion in the report. I am making this public reference to the report in order to call the attention of the Committee on Rules and Administration, which I think will now have jurisdiction over all matters of printing, to the public demand for the document. I feel that because of the reference in the President's message on the state of the Union, and because of the reference contained in the economic report of the President which was submitted today, there will be considerable public demand for the report. I shall at a later day offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules and Administration for the reprinting of this document.

Mr. President, without taking the time of the Senate to read it, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement issued by me to the press today, with respect to the economic report of the President.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRUMAN'S PROGRAM TO SAVE PRIVATE PROPERTY

In his message on the state of the Union on Monday and again today in the Economic Report, President Truman has laid down a policy for the preservation of the capitalistic system. There is nothing sensational about it, nothing even dramatic, but unless it is followed it will become increasingly difficult to stem the drift toward big government.

Authoritarianism is just around the corner unless the people of America take immediate and positive action to maintain free competitive enterprise. It should be noted that the President refers not to "free enterprise," but to "free competitive enterprise." Unless competition is maintained in business, economic concentration in a few big units will continue and this will end only in the Government taking over.

CAPITALISTS PUT ON NOTICE

President Truman has put the capitalists on notice. Unless they cooperate with him to maintain competition they will be playing the game of those who are consciously working for totalitarianism in government.

The economic report is notable in that it calls attention to the fact that public works alone will not solve the problem of unemployment in a crisis. "In the event of severe unemployment," he says, referring to public works, "they cannot be generated in sufficient volume to avoid supplementation by other means." This was proved during the depression. A free enterprise system cannot stand upon the foundation of "made work" whether that "made work" is permanent like the PWA projects of the depression or more or less temporary like the projects of the Works Projects Administration. A free enterprise system which means nothing unless it means the institution of private property for individuals rather than for government or for collective corporate groups can be preserved only by maintaining a high level of purchasing power among the masses of the people by keeping the door of opportunity open to all individuals who desire to engage in business and by preventing the continued absorption of industrial productive and commercial activity by a few giant corporations.

PROHIBITION OF MERGERS

To accomplish this objective the President endorses the recommendations of the Temporary National Economic Committee for the amendment of the Clayton Act to make the prohibition against monopolistic mergers effective, to enforce the existing antitrust laws, and to encourage small business by giving to small businessmen through the Department of Commerce the "information on markets and technical and commercial facts" which are now available only to big business which has the resources to maintain staffs of high-pressure economists and lobbyists in Washington.

Of equal importance is the President's summons to business to reduce prices wherever possible and his declaration for the maintenance of a high level of Government revenue so that the public debt may be paid.

DANGER OF CUTTING GOVERNMENT REVENUE

We cannot have good business unless prices are such as to encourage sales. A good market is the essential basis of prosperity. The businesses which increase prices are jeopardizing their own prosperity. A reduction of revenue while the national debt remains at its present high peak ($260,000,000,000) would cut the foundations from under the capitalistic system because such a policy would threaten the stability of Government bonds. Tax reduction now would mean the substitution of Government I O U's for Government bonds and would destroy the savings of millions who, during the war, as the President's report points out, saved between 25 and 30 percent of their income. The rate of saving began to fall in 1945 with the peace, and now is only about 10 percent of the income of the people—a rate similar to that in 1939.

This striking falling off of income is a danger signal which no businessman can afford to overlook. It is a danger signal which should warn every Member of Congress that the President's economic program should be carried out.

The economic report of the President transmitted to Congress today should be required reading in every college and high school of the United States. Every bank and every business house should give it prayerful attention free from all preconceived political notions.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in response to an inquiry by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], let me say that I have not asked that this report be made a Senate document now, but I intend to offer a resolution to that effect to go to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had in mind that perhaps the report should be made a Senate document, but I defer the request for the present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore and referred as indicated:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Joint Resolution 8

"A joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to adopt a national housing policy providing for effective cooperation between Federal, State, and local governments to meet the current critical housing emergency, and to adopt immediate measures to facilitate the successful operation of State and local emergency housing programs

Yours very truly,

O. G. COLWELL,
President.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS BY SENATOR WILEY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, before we proceed further with the morning hour, because I have to attend the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee at 12:30, and I have a meeting with the Attorney General at 1 o'clock, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to introduce certain measures and submit certain resolutions at this time.

STUDY OF EMERGENCY AND WARTIME LEGISLATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, first I submit a resolution authorizing and directing all standing committees of the Senate to make a full and complete study of all existing temporary and permanent emergency and wartime legislation falling within their respective jurisdictions.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 35) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That each standing committee of the Senate is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study of all existing temporary and permanent emergency and wartime legislation (including legislation which terminates on or after a proclamation proclaiming the cessation of hostilities) which falls within the jurisdiction of the respective standing committees. Each such committee is further authorized and directed to make such recommendations with respect to such legislation as it may deem advisable to the Committee on the Judiciary not later than February 15, 1947.

Resolved further, That upon receipt of such recommendations the Committee on the Judiciary shall review and correlate them, and not later than March 5, 1947, shall submit such recommendations to the Senate as it may deem advisable.

Mr. WILEY. In connection with the resolution just submitted by me, I ask that there be printed at this point in the RECORD a report entitled "Termination of War Controls," which I made to the Republican conference on December 30, 1946.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERMINATION OF WAR CONTROLS

A. INTRODUCTION

1. Purpose of this report

It is a pleasure to present to my colleagues this report in fulfillment of the assignment to me by the Republican steering committee. The assignment requested my study into the subject of possible termination of war controls by general resolution.

I have prepared the following analysis, based upon research covering as many phases of the problem as I could touch upon. In the course of my inquiry I utilized data from private and governmental sources including the resources of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. In addition, I consulted the report on this same subject made by Representative LEWIS, Republican, of Ohio, to Representative MARTIN of Massachusetts, and the report of the House Postwar Planning Committee. Finally, I consulted every member of the President's Cabinet, together with the Veterans' Administration. I requested of the Cabinet Secretaries and the Veterans' Administration a statement as to which emergency and war powers lay within their jurisdiction, which war powers they regarded as feasible of termination now and why, and which they regarded as preferably not terminated now and when might they be so terminated.

Most of these 11 officers have replied to me. In each case, the official listed the emergency and wartime powers within his jurisdiction but stated that his recommendations as to which should be terminated and when had been submitted to the President for the Chief Executive's review. Thereafter, I wrote to the President, asking for his recommendations, but I have received no reply to date. I may emphasize at this point that I believe this subject is so important that it must be considered and handled in as nonpartisan a manner as possible.

2. History of termination of World War I

I should like to present now a very brief history of the termination of the statutes of the first world conflict, as prepared for me by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. I quote from this Division's report:

"Considerable confusion was created by the armistice of November 11, 1918, and the message to Congress on that day, in which the President, after outlining the terms of the armistice, stated: 'The war thus comes to an end; for having accepted these terms of armistice, it will be impossible for the German command to renew it' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 56, pt. 11, p. 11538). As evidence of this confusion we call attention to the court litigation which commenced, for example in U. S. v. Hicks (1919, 256 F. 707), and Commercial Cable Co. v. Burleson (1919, 255 F. 99).

"On April 1, 1920, there was introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327, 66th Cong.) declaring the state of war at an end. After favorable legislative consideration, this bill was vetoed on May 27, 1920 (H. Doc. 799, 66th Cong.), by President Wilson because he objected, among other things, to terminating the war merely by repealing the joint resolutions of war of April 6, 1917 (Germany, 40 Stat. 1), and December 7, 1917 (Austria, 40 Stat. 429). This resolution was one of approximately thirty bills introduced in the Sixty-fifth, Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses providing for the study of wartime legislation (S. J. Res. 119, 65th Cong.), the repeal of specific wartime laws, or the repeal of the joint resolutions of April 6 and December 7, 1917.

"A study prepared in February 1920 by the Legislative Reference Service, which was printed as a Senate committee print by the Committee on the Judiciary, indicates that the problem at that time was far less complex than the present one confronting Congress.

"On December 6, 1920, Representative Volstead introduced House Joint Resolution 382, which declared that certain acts, joint resolutions, and proclamations should be construed as if the war had ended and the emergency had expired (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 60, pt. 1, p. 11). After prolonged consideration, this joint resolution was passed and approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. 1359). In the meantime, the President had been active in terminating war programs by Executive order.

"The joint resolution of July 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 105), declared the state of war with Germany and Austria at an end. This was followed by the proclamation of the Treaty of Peace with Germany on November 14, 1921 (42 Stat. 1939)."

3. Problems in terminating war and emergency controls by general resolution

The basic problem in terminating war and emergency controls by general resolution is that it would affect several hundreds of laws of varying complexity and importance. They may be divided broadly into five categories, as follows:

1. Legislation limited to definite termination dates;

2. Legislation predicated upon the limited emergency proclaimed by the President September 8, 1939 (54 Stat. 2643);

3. Legislation predicated upon the unlimited emergency proclaimed by the President May 27, 1941 (55 Stat. 1647);

4. Legislation predicated upon the cessation of hostilities; and

5. Legislation predicated upon the end of the war.

Many of these statutes have already been terminated. We may expect that others will be ended rapidly in the normal course of events by the Chief Executive. However, there is a large body of laws which lie within the field of policy differences as to when they should be terminated and it is these which provide the fundamental basis of our problem.

4. Fundamental Republican position

As a last note before I submit my recommendations, may I state what I construe to be the Republican position on the matter of terminating war controls, especially those which affect the health of our domestic economy. It has been the position of our party, as I see it, that all emergency and wartime controls be terminated at the earliest possible date, that all powers delegated to the Chief Executive during the emergency and war conditions, which are normally inherent within the legislative branch, should be returned to the legislative branch, that the unrestrained tendency to multiply a bureaucratic empire through emergency and war powers should be vigorously curbed, and that the bureaucracy should itself be cut.

This, as I interpret it, is the Republican position, and it is a position which, as you so well know, has been endorsed by the overwhelming mandate of the American people expressed at the polls on November 5, 1946.

But the Republican Party is also pledged to terminate war controls in an orderly manner, one which will not create chaos, and, moreover, to terminate them in such a way that they will not render our Nation helpless in the event of any domestic or foreign emergency.

These, then, are the general bases of the Republican position in my opinion.

B. RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Basic recommendation

My basic recommendation is that we do not terminate war and emergency controls by general resolution at this time.

2. Reasons for basic recommendation

The following are my reasons for opposing a general resolution at this time terminating all emergency and wartime statutes:

(A) The First Reason—Continued National Emergency

I need hardly point out to my colleagues that, although the shooting war is over, war emergencies remain. In the international sphere, we are still fighting a war of ideas. The world continues in a turbulent state, economically as well as politically. On the home front, we are still in a domestic crisis. We have shortages that should have been avoided. There has been widespread lack of production due to strikes and restrictive Government regulations. If we were to close our eyes to these international and domestic emergencies and deprive our Government of such tenuous powers as it already has, for example, in the domestic field relating to strike control, we might find that we are losing the kind of enduring peace, for which 300,000 of our heroic men gave their lives.

It is still easier to get into a war than to get out of a war. War does not make for peace. It leaves a bitter legacy of problems which exist for years and years. It is foolhardy to deny these problems and dangerous to assume that the mere end of shooting returns us to the peaceful world of pre-1939. We are living in a different age today. With the advent of the atomic age, many of the emergency and wartime statutes continue to be essential, at least in some degree. We must be adequate to our responsibilities in the atomic age.

(B) The Second Reason—Varied and Complex Nature of Wartime Statutes

If we were, by general resolution, at this time to terminate all of the statutes, we would in one sweep wipe out legislation of a great complexity and touching every conceivable subject handled by Congress—the Armed Forces, international trade, agriculture, public lands and natural resources, labor controls, and so on. Each of these fields can only be handled by the appropriate congressional committee, looking separately and exhaustively into the problems unique to each field.

If we were to act upon a general resolution terminating hostilities and all war and emergency controls without exception, and if that resolution were referred simply to a single committee, for example, the Judiciary Committee, its members would find themselves hopelessly inadequate to the task of reviewing all of the varied pieces of legislation, and finding whether or not they continued to be necessary.

(C) The Third Reason—Chaotic Effects Resulting From Over-All Repeal

I have stated there are many important pieces of legislation which must be thoroughly studied, and only after the most exhaustive study, should it be determined whether to retain, amend, or repeal them.

It should be borne in mind that the greatest number of wartime-control statutes, which have a direct impact on business operations, are those which have a specific termination date fixed in the statute itself and such laws will expire on the date fixed unless reenacted or earlier terminated by the Congress, or in some instances, by the President. They are, in no way, dependent upon the declaration of the end of the war, of hostilities, or other condition of emergency, except to the extent that the existence of a state of war lends validity to the exercise of such controls.

I call to your attention a few instances of the chaotic effect of abrupt termination of hostilities and of war and emergency statutes:

1. Specific termination dates

The Emergency Price Control Act would terminate on June 30, 1947. Likewise, the Stabilization Act would terminate on the same date unless earlier terminated by Congress or the President. The Second War Powers Act would terminate on March 31, 1947. They contain authority for:

(a) Rationing.
(b) Priorities on delivery of materials.
(c) Allocation of materials.
(d) Motor carriers transportation preference.
(e) Inventory controls.
(f) Allocation of the use of rubber-borne equipment.
(g) Allocation of food and food facilities.
(h) Acquisition of real property.

The Selective Training and Service Act would terminate on March 31, 1947. Section 9 of the Selective Service Act, as amended by section 3 of the War Labor Disputes Act, authorizes the Government to seize and operate plants, mines, or facilities where there is an interruption or a threatened interruption to work as a result of a labor dispute.

The act of July 2, 1940, granting authority to regulate exports of articles, technical data, materials, or supplies, has the fixed termination date of June 30, 1947.

The War Mobilization and Reconversion Act terminates June 30, 1947.

2. End of the war or within a fixed time thereafter

Over 125 statutes would terminate with the official end of the war or within a fixed period thereafter of anywhere from 3 months to 6 years.

Titles 1 and 2 of the First War Powers Act which, generally speaking, have to do with the internal operation of the Government during wartime, and do not impose controls upon our civilian economy, remain in force during the present war and for 6 months thereafter. Under title 1, the President is authorized to reorganize and consolidate the functions of the executive bureaus and agencies, including the Army and Navy. Under title 2, the President is empowered to authorize any department of government to enter into contracts without regard to provisions of law regulating the making, performance, amendment, etc., of such contracts. Army officials have stated that a declaration ending the war would mean that the Army would have but 6 months to return to the United States all troops now abroad in occupied countries and elsewhere, except those in the Regular Army.

3. End of hostilities or within a fixed time thereafter

Within this category are found the War Labor Disputes Act and the Surplus Property Act. The latter act provides for the disposal of all Government surplus property 3 years after the date of cessation of hostilities. Here we also find the act of July 12, 1943, which provides that leases of silver entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury must be terminated within 6 months after hostilities cease. Much of this silver is being used by the War Department in the atomic energy plant at Oak Ridge.

4. Emergency statutes and permanent law

There are permanent laws, like Trading With the Enemy Act of October 6, 1917, the Interstate Commerce Commission Act, giving the Commission authority to establish railroad transportation priorities, and the act of June 3, 1916, empowering the President to seize plants, and others which are permanent law but they only go into operation during wartime or periods of emergency.

5. Tax statutes

There are 25 or 30 provisions of the Internal Revenue Code which are effective during the war, hostilities, or the emergencies, and usually have a fixed period following the termination thereof. These statutes have close relationship to the Government's tax program and require the consideration of technical and specialized subjects.

6. Agriculture

The legislation on the books relating to American agriculture requires earnest consideration. Were we arbitrarily to wipe out price supports, we might well find before long the farmers having the same experience that they had during the twenties and thirties. This must not happen. We are all aware of the illustrious war performance of the American farmers, the vast amount of foodstuffs produced to feed our country and the world, despite the lack of machinery, of farm labor, and of adequate Government encouragement. The farmers are one class who have never struck. They are the backbone of America. A prosperous America depends upon their continued prosperity.

3. Suggestions for Republican action

What, then, are my specific recommendations? I recommend the following:

(a) That immediately upon the opening of the Eightieth Congress there be enacted a Senate resolution stating it to be the sense of the Senate (1) that there be a review of all existing temporary and permanent emergency and wartime legislation by each subject-matter committee of the Senate, including the Senate Appropriations Committee, as to matters coming within their respective jurisdictions; and (2) that such committees, not later than February 15, 1947, send to the Senate Judiciary Committee a report based on their review, presenting their recommendations for amendment, repeal, consolidation, and other revision of permanent and temporary emergency and wartime laws within their respective jurisdictions. (This matter, both as to policy and mechanics of operation, might be handled similarly in the House.)

(b) That the policy of each of the committees in reviewing these statutes and making their recommendations should be as follows:

1. To recommend the repeal of all temporary and permanent emergency and wartime statutes which are found to be obsolete, the continuance of which is inadvisable or unnecessary at present or in the foreseeable future. Particular stress should be placed on eliminating from the statute books laws whose repeal might result in: (a) Savings to the Federal Government, (b) reassumption by Congress of its former power delegated to the Chief Executive, (c) reassumption by private enterprise of its initiative rather than reliance on the Federal Government, (d) reassumption by State governments of powers and controls normally within their jurisdictions.

2. To recommend such new permanent legislation as may be necessary to cope with any foreseeable emergency or war, domestic or foreign. Such new permanent legislation should provide appropriate checks and limitations to forestall the possibility of arbitrary and despotic acts by a dictator-minded Chief Executive.

(c) That upon receipt of the recommendations submitted to it by the respective committees above referred to, the Senate Judiciary Committee shall proceed to review and correlate them in the light of the overall national welfare; and that, not later than March 5, 1947, the Judiciary Committee shall prepare an appropriate resolution to be submitted for Senate action.

It should be noted again that major statutes such as the Selective Training and Service Act and the Second War Powers Act expire automatically on March 31, 1947, unless renewed. The wisdom of Congress may therefore require relatively prompter consideration of these statutes.

C. EXHIBIT

At my request, the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress has prepared a booklet listing the provisions of Federal statutes affected by the termination of the war and/or emergency. This listing has been made to correspond with the subject-matter assignments of the standing committees of Congress established by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Thus, if my recommendation is followed and the statutes are siphoned into the respective committees, this booklet should facilitate the committees' review by outlining the specific laws before each of them.

SENATE DOCUMENT NO. 5

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, also in connection with the resolution just submitted by me I ask that there be printed as a Senate document a report setting forth the provisions of Federal statutes affected by the termination of hostilities, the war, and emergency. The report was prepared at my request by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. It has relation to the resolution which I have just submitted.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS CONCERNING ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. WILEY. I resubmit a resolution stating that "It is the sense of the Senate that any international agreement relating to the use, development, or control of atomic energy, entered into by a representative of the United States, is not valid and binding upon this country unless it is ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate as a formal treaty."

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 36) was received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that any international agreement relating to the use, development or control of atomic energy, entered into by a representative of the United States, is not valid and binding upon this country unless it is ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate as a formal treaty.

DEPARTMENT OF PEACE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I reintroduce a bill to create an executive department of the Government to be known as the Department of Peace.

The bill (S. 79) to create an executive department of the Government to be known as the Department of Peace, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PROTECTION OF THE AMERICAN FLAG

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am proud to introduce companion legislation to that introduced by Representative GEARHART, of California, to prevent desecration of the American flag. I believe that the Republican Eightieth Congress must, and will, enact such legislation at an early date. In doing so it will contribute a shining star to its record and will fill the sorry gap resulting from the omission of this vital legislation by all previous 79 Congresses. I believe that passage of this legislation is necessary on these grounds:

First. As a pointed illustration to every American youth and American adult of the respect and veneration with which the Congress holds Old Glory. These sentiments must, of course, be shared by every American, young and old.

Second. As a belated tribute to 300,000 Americans who died in the Second World War in protecting the Stars and Stripes and to those of our gallant men and women who have died in all previous wars in defense of Old Glory. The emblem which was raised on Mount Surabachi and on countless alien battlefields must not be allowed to be bespattered and trampled in the dust by anti-American groups in our midst.

Third. As a very real contribution to the defense of the American birthright. Red Fascists and other subversives have always used our flag as a primary target for their hate and venom because they recognize that if they can besmirch the symbol of the American constitutional system they will have gone a long way in undermining the Republic. Passage of this legislation will be a bar to their insidious efforts.

Fourth. As a reminder to every foreign nation of the respect with which our Congress and our people hold our national emblem. We cannot expect foreign respect of the American flag unless we, ourselves, show such respect and buttress such respect by appropriate legislation which will protect Old Glory.

The bill (S. 80) to prevent desecration and mutilation of the flag of the United States, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. WILEY. I introduce a joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim October 11, 1947, as General Casimir Pulaski Memorial Day.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 11) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1947, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LIMITATION OF PRESIDENTIAL TENURE

Mr. WILEY. I am reintroducing a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the United States Constitution limiting Presidential tenure to two terms.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to submit a resolution for appropriate reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not want to object, but we were proceeding under the order petitions and memorials, and it seems to me that we should wait until later for the presentation of resolutions.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Ohio in his suggestion regarding procedure. We have branched off into other matters. We have not started auspiciously. During the past several days no attention has been paid to the rule. If we are not to observe this rule, we might as well start abolishing the other rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

The purpose of the bill is to assist the several States in establishing and maintaining safe working conditions in industry and in promoting the observance of safety precautions and rules by employers and employees in industry. I ask that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee.

PRESIDENTIAL TERMS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution. I wish to explain that I desired to offer it in the regular order. Because of the fact that I have observed the regular order, I wish to have it receive a number to correspond with the numbers of the joint resolutions which were introduced out of order, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELECTION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DELEGATES TO NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTIONS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I reintroduce a bill to regulate the election of delegates representing the District of Columbia to national political conventions. I received a letter from John P. Mullen, a prominent attorney of Washington, who comments favorably on this proposed legislation. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 115) to regulate the election of delegates representing the District of Columbia to national political conventions was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the letter presented by Mr. CAPPER in connection with the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 2, 1947.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I do indeed believe that our primary bill for the District of Columbia should become a much needed law early in the Eightieth Congress. Accordingly, I am transmitting to you that which in the Seventy-ninth Congress was S. 242 to be, if you please, again introduced in its precise form.

Now is the time for a real attempt to give to the Nation's Capital some semblance of suffrage. And, at the same time, obviate the possibility of any self-anointed local political chieftain again parading off to the next party conventions his hand-picked delegates who, to quote from a local editorial, "no more represent the people of the District of Columbia than a cat represents a mouse."

Thus it is clear that such a law is vitally needed. For, after all, does not primary mean the first step in any process?

With best wishes for the New Year, I am,

Sincerely,

JOHN P. MULLEN.

GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, a few moments ago I rose to introduce a joint resolution, but it was suggested that I wait until that order was reached. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. LODGE] and myself I now introduce a joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim October 11, 1947, General Pulaski Memorial Day. My colleague and I are much interested in this joint resolution and hope the committee to which it is referred will take prompt and favorable action upon it. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 13) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1947, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brigadier General Casimir Pulaski was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and directed to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11, 1947, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of General Casimir Pulaski.

" 'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"If such question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting in the case of any such motion to take up a measure, together with any and all points of order against such measure, then such measure shall be deemed to be the unfinished business.

"If such question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting in the case of any such motion to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure, then such measure shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of. Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the pending measure, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

SHORTAGE OF COAL CARS

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I submit a resolution providing for an inquiry and investigation into the shortage of coal cars in certain of the coal-mining areas, and I think it is in order that I make a brief statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from West Virginia may proceed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, for the past several months there has been a shortage of cars for the transportation of coal from the mines to the market. The result has been a reduction of production and a lessening of work and employment in the mines. It is a very serious thing when the production of coal and the employment of those producing coal are intermittently interrupted. I submit the resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received and referred as requested.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. In connection with the request made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], that his resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I think that is the appropriate committee to which the resolution should be referred. However, in the past there has been a tendency for some Members of the Senate to introduce bills or resolutions and request that they be referred to particular committees. In view of the fact that we have reorganized the Senate, serious question may arise at times as to the committees to which measures should be referred. So it seems to me that with reference to bills that are introduced, Senators should ask that they be appropriately referred, and then the Parliamentarian and the Presiding Officer should determine where such bills should go.

What I have said is more in the nature of a suggestion than a parliamentary inquiry. I am satisfied that the Senator's resolution should go to the committee which he has suggested; but I raise the point that he made the request that the resolution go to a particular committee, rather than that it be appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). The point raised by the Senator from Illinois is well taken. Under the Reorganization Act the type of legislation which will go to any particular committee is clearly defined; but it is within the province of the Presiding Officer to decide as to the legislative committee which is to have jurisdiction. It may be proper for a Senator to suggest to which committee a bill introduced by him should go, but the final reference is not in the province of the Member introducing it.

Mr. LUCAS. I am indebted to the Chair for that explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, however, a Senator might get from the Senate permission to have a measure referred to some other committee than that designated by the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate that. Anything can be done in this body by unanimous consent, the rules to the contrary notwithstanding. However, I know, Mr. President, that in the past resolutions which have been submitted and bills which have been introduced have sometimes been referred to the wrong committees merely because the Senators who submitted the resolutions or introduced the bills made specific request regarding the reference to committee. I bring this matter to the attention of the Senate at this time in view of the fact that so many of the committees have been consolidated. It seems to me that the Parliamentarian and the Chair should exercise their rights more than ever before in seeing to it that resolutions and bills are appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is well taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to emphasize the remarks and point made by the Senator from Illinois. As the Senator who is now in the Chair and other Senators know, I have for a long time protested against a sort of obiter dictum ruling by a former Vice President to the effect that he would refer any measure to the committee to which the author of the measure wished it to go. It seemed to me at the time that it was a mere remark, not a ruling. The rules in regard to the jurisdiction of committees of the Senate have been more or less vague, but in the reorganization bill and in respect to the consolidation of committees an effort has been made to define more clearly the jurisdiction of committees and the types of legislation which shall be referred to them.

As we are starting out now under the new dispensation, I think the point which has been made in a good one, and I think the suggested procedure is something which we should try to observe and enforce. I hope that whoever is in the chair will undertake to have measures appropriately referred, that is to say, to the committees intended to have jurisdiction over the subject matter, regardless of the requests of authors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that the resolution submitted by the Senator from West Virginia—and as the Chair understands, no point has been made regarding it by the Senator from Illinois—is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and is properly referred to that committee. But the reference should be made by the Presiding Officer, not by the Senator submitting the resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the matter of the introduction of bills and other measures. I hope that from the start, from this day on, there will not be reference of measures on the basis of personal or unanimous-consent requests. As Senators have stated, we have undertaken to define the jurisdiction of committees. I hope that in all cases that system will govern the references, and that no personal requests will play any part in the determination of the committees to which measures are referred.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, with respect to the resolution which the Senator from West Virginia just submitted, which has precipitated this discussion, mention of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was made only because it was the view of the author of the resolution that that committee was the appropriate one to receive the resolution. I understand that no point has been made that it is not the appropriate committee.

I heartily concur in the view which has been expressed, namely, that bills and resolutions should certainly be referred to the appropriate committees. In this instance, mention of the specific committee was made only because I thought there could be no debate or question as to the fact that the requested reference was the appropriate one.

The resolution (S. Res. 44) submitted by Mr. REVERCOMB was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the adequacy of the supply of railroad coal cars in the West Virginia coal-mining areas and with respect to the reasons for any inadequacy of such supply.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

EFFECT ON SOUTHERN AGRICULTURE OF EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAM

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, a few weeks ago I was very much surprised to read in the public press a statement by Col. C. C. Hanson, secretary of the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture, in which he stated that he had filed a brief with the State Department in opposition to the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements with foreign countries. That statement was heralded over the United States—and I am informed over the world—as a great reversal in the traditional attitude of the South on this question. I know that through tearing down trade barriers a great benefit will accrue to southern agriculture, and I was amazed that the commissioners of agriculture of the Southern States should take such a position. I immediately wrote the commissioner of agriculture of the State of Mississippi. He sent the following telegram to Colonel Hanson:

DECEMBER 30, 1946.

Mr. C. C. HANSON,
Secretary, Southern Commissioners,
Raleigh Hotel,
Washington, D. C.:

Cannot concur in program in opposition negotiating extension reciprocal trade agreements. This question has not been presented or acted upon by southern commissioners at any legally called meeting attended by me since 1940. Suggest poll association membership before any further activities on this question.

SI CORLEY, Commissioner.

Mr. President, it appears to me from Mr. Corley's telegram that Colonel Hanson had not polled the southern commissioners of agriculture and had no authority from them to speak in their behalf.

Further, I read a letter which I received from Mr. Corley, the Mississsippi commissioner of agriculture, dated December 31, 1946:

Hon. JAMES O. EASTLAND,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: Your letter of December 24 arrived during our long Christmas holiday. Upon opening it yesterday I tried to call you at Ruleville but was informed you were en route to Washington.

I am enclosing a copy of telegram I sent Colonel Hanson giving my position on the reciprocal trade treaty. I also called Commissioner Harry D. Wilson and Colonel Hanson and found I was right in that this question has not been discussed at any meeting since I entered this office.

I particularly invite the attention of the Senate and the country to that statement. I repeat it:

I also called Commissioner Harry D. Wilson and Colonel Hanson and found I was right in that this question has not been discussed at any meeting since I entered this office. I told Colonel Hanson that my position was the same as that of the Mississippi Farm Bureau and other agricultural leaders of Mississippi and that I propose to join them in favoring the continuation of trade agreements with the request that agricultural products be given a little more favorable position in the treaty than they have in the past.

I certainly appreciate your calling my attention to this matter, as I had not noted Hanson's release in the paper, and from the article I received this morning, which appeared in the New York Times, was to the effect that the 13 commissioners had opposed any reciprocal agreement.

Again thanking you for the information on this matter and wishing you a most prosperous and successful New Year, I am

Sincerely yours,

SI CORLEY, Commissioner.

So, Mr. President, it appears that a brief was filed by Colonel Hanson in an attempt to change the entire policy of the South on these questions. It also appears that he had not consulted a single commissioner of agriculture and spoke merely his own views for what they might be worth.

In this regard I should like to read a statement given to the public press by Mr. Joe N. Poole, commissioner of agriculture industries in the State of Alabama. The statement was made in a telegram which he sent to the President of the United States on December 27. The telegram reads as follows:

The brief filed with the Committee for Reciprocity Information by C. C. Hanson protesting against the proposal to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements with certain countries in behalf of the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture does not represent my views with reference to reciprocal trade agreements, the AAA program, the Bankhead farm bills, and other agricultural legislation mentioned. Mr. Hanson had no authority to speak for me either as an individual or as commissioner of agriculture for Alabama. In my opinion, Mr. Hanson's brief would be supported by only a small minority, if any, of the farm people of Alabama.

I think he speaks the sentiments of the farmers of the whole South when he says that Colonel Hanson would be supported by only a very small minority, if any, of those who are engaged in agricultural pursuits.

I read further from Commissioner Poole's statement:

It is my opinion that the farm people of Alabama, in general, support the principles of reciprocal trade agreements, as it has been long recognized that our protective policies have worked undue hardships on agricultural producers.

That statement is sound, and will apply not only to the farm population of Alabama but, in my humble judgment, to the farm population of every other section of the United States.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. If the Senator from Maine will let me finish reading this telegram, I shall be glad to yield.

I read further:

We do believe, however, that in administering the trade-agreements program, equitable treatment in adjusting trade barriers must be given to agricultural products. It is my sincere opinion that the brief presented by Mr. Hanson is inconsistent with the best interests economically of the United States and the world and is certainly a serious blow against achieving a permanent peace.

The telegram is signed by Joe N. Poole, commissioner of agriculture and industries of the State of Alabama.

Mr. President, I say that 99 percent of the people of the South concur in the statement of Commissioner Poole.

I now yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I do not wish to precipitate a discussion of reciprocal trade agreements or tariffs, but in view of the statement of the Senator from Mississippi, I think it would be appropriate to know at this point whether or not the Senator contemplates giving up the quota and quantitative restrictions on our importation of cotton, which restrictions are alien to the reciprocal trade agreements and to the current policies of the Government.

Mr. EASTLAND. It is certainly fundamental economics that American cotton must compete with world cotton on a price and quality basis.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I appreciate the Senator's statement; but, under the quota system American cotton enjoys a protection that practically no other American product enjoys. We do not object to that, believing in protection, but we wonder whether the South would share the benefits with us in other fields.

Mr. EASTLAND. Regardless of whether it is a southern product or a northern product, the whole prosperity and future of the country depend upon the destruction of trade barriers; and I do not think that the selfish interests of anyone should interfere with such a great program.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. VANDENBERG. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations; which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations I report favorably and unanimously the nomination of George C. Marshall, of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of State. I desire to make a brief explanatory statement in connection with the report.

The committee feels very keenly that we must not establish the practice of confirming nominations without complete hearing and investigation. The committee wishes me to state that the action now proposed is not in any way to be considered a precedent in respect to the procedure ordinarily to be followed in the consideration of nominations. However, the committee feels that it is highly essential that the voice of the Senate, unanimously, if possible, should notify the world immediately this afternoon that unity still prevails in respect to this situation.

I present the unanimous report of the committee, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SALTONSTALL in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George C. Marshall, of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Gen. George C. Marshall to be Secretary of State?

The nomination was unanimously confirmed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. WHITE obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, at the time the OPA ceilings on cattle were removed, the livestock producers of the West were much concerned. The border had been closed for some months, perhaps a year, because of foot-and-mouth disease among the cattle in Mexico.

I cannot overestimate the devastating effect in any country of the presence of foot-and-mouth disease in cattle, and every possible precaution should be taken to prevent any such outbreak in the United States. This particularly applies to the West, where the cattle have been kept singularly free from diseases of all kinds.

The Mexican border has been closed again on account of a recurrence of the foot-and-mouth disease among the cattle herds in Mexico.

Not so very long ago a number of Brazilian bulls were admitted to this country, and some found their way to the Rocky Mountain States. The danger that these bulls are possibly carriers of the foot-and-mouth disease is one that cannot be overestimated. They are a great hazard when alive, and they can be a greater hazard when dead if not properly buried or cremated. I have also been advised that some 900 head of Mexican cattle were brought into Montana during the recent holiday season.

I mention this in the hope that the Department of Agriculture will take notice and see that prompt action is taken to survey the whole situation of cattle that have been or may be imported from Mexico and South America.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER DEVELOPMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD at this point an article entitled "Benefits to Farm Homes and the Nation From the St. Lawrence Project," by Fred J. Freestone, which was prepared for the Power Authority of the State of New York.

I also ask to have printed excerpts from the annual message of Governor Thomas E. Dewey to the Legislature of the State of New York, submitted this morning, which refers to the same subject, namely, the St. Lawrence seaway.

There being no objection, the article and excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BENEFITS TO FARM HOMES AND THE NATION FROM THE ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

(By Fred J. Freestone)

On June 13, 1946, the United States Senate received a report adopted by the Committee on Foreign Relations recommending passage of Joint Resolution 104 to authorize construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.

As recommended by the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and favorably reported by the Senate committee, the pending plan provides for development of the St. Lawrence River for power and navigation purposes. The greater part of the new work required to complete the project will be carried out in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence, a 48-mile stretch on New York State's boundary with the Province of Ontario.

The St. Lawrence River is New York State's principal undeveloped resource of low-cost hydroelectric power. Even with its present outmoded canals and locks, it is a going concern as one of the busiest navigable waterways now in operation in this country. In the war years annual commerce, carried in more than 5,000 separate cargoes which passed through the St. Lawrence in a single season, rose above 10,000,000 tons.

SHORTAGE OF FACILITIES DURING THE WAR

All over the United States during World War II rail transportation was taxed beyond its capacity. Greatly expanded hydroelectric power plants, public and private, and new installations for steam power generated from coal and oil were required for war production.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey took office at Albany in the midst of the war in January 1943. Since Pearl Harbor, New York farms had been suffering from shortages of feed for cattle and poultry, shortages of lumber, coal, oil, gasoline, trucks, farm machinery, and other equipment and supplies desperately needed to sustain full production.

With characteristic vigor and tenacity, Governor Dewey grappled with the wartime problems which confronted New York agriculture. Much needed equipment in short supply could not then be obtained under the operation of wartime controls at Washington. Nevertheless, emergency measures were initiated by the State government, seasonal farm labor was recruited, bottlenecks in transportation were attacked, and every aid was given to assist New York State farmers in their critical job of food production. By the end of the war, in the face of unprecedented difficulties, New York State had achieved a record production, surpassing normal levels in many important food items.

AGRICULTURE A LEADING INDUSTRY IN NEW YORK STATE

Few people outside its borders realize that New York State, which leads the Nation in manufactures, is outranked in the value of its farm production by only five or six other States. There are today more than 150,000 farm homes in New York State, supporting a farm population of over 700,000. This exceeds the farm population of all the New England States combined. It is greater than the farm population of such predominantly agricultural States as Nebraska, Kansas, North or South Dakota, or any one of the States of the mountain section or the Pacific coast.

In the production of milk, butter, cheese, poultry, eggs, market vegetables, noncitrus fruits, and many other essential foods for human consumption, New York State is among the leaders throughout the Nation.

The importance of agriculture as one of the basic industries of New York State has been recognized by Governor Dewey, both in the emergency program initiated during the war and in long-range measures recommended by the Governor for postwar development. In a message to the legislature January 3, 1945, as in other public statements, the Governor urged prompt development of the St. Lawrence and emphasized the value and benefit of its low-cost hydroelectric energy to producers and consumers throughout the area.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER NEEDED BY NEW YORK FARMS

No one familiar with farming operations in this State will dispute the conclusion that New York farmers will greatly benefit from the St. Lawrence development.

Dairy farming, poultry raising, and the production of fruits and vegetables are peculiarly adapted to the use of electrical energy at low rates in electrical equipment and appliances, including deep-freezing and other refrigerating equipment, milking machines, milk coolers, driers, brooders, and many others. In addition, there is a great pent-up demand for washing machines, vacuum cleaners, refrigerators, electric stoves, and other appliances in the modern farm homes of New York State.

In recent years encouraging progress has been made in New York State in extending electric service to the farms and in introducing promotional rates to permit wider use of electrical energy and electrical appliances at lower cost to the consumer.

In its annual report, February 15, 1945, the public service commission stated that at the end of 1944 electric service was being furnished to 123,000 New York State farms over 42,500 miles of rural lines. This represented an increase in the number of New York State farms with central station electric service of more than 184 percent since 1929, when only 43,300 farms had such service.

Further progress in reducing the spread in the costs paid for electrical energy in New York State, as compared with the low-cost hydroelectric power areas, is necessary if New York farms and industries are to compete on an equal footing in our domestic and foreign trade.

ALL BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY WILL GAIN BENEFITS FROM PROJECT

Development of St. Lawrence power will increase by 1,100,000 horsepower, or less than one-fifth the present power capacity of the State, and cannot, therefore, displace or absorb the markets of existing utilities.

It will stimulate new business and create new industry for New York State to develop its low-cost hydroelectric resources instead of relying exclusively upon more expensive steam power to meet the normal growth in the demand for electric energy. All business and industry will gain from this development in New York State, including the utilities and their security holders.

COST SMALL IN COMPARISON WITH OTHER AUTHORIZED PROJECTS

Authorized postwar river projects approved by Congress since 1944 up to the end of the last session include improvement of the Missouri River, for power, navigation, irrigation, and flood control, at a cost of $800,000,000; the first stage in improvement of the Arkansas River, at an ultimate cost of $450,000,000; and new dams on the Columbia River, where Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams have already been completed, to expand the Columbia River development for power, navigation, and irrigation to a cost of more than $750,000,000.

Net cost of completing the development of the St. Lawrence River, estimated at $212,000,000, is therefore small in comparison with other projects already approved by Congress.

BENEFITS OF ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT ESTABLISHED AT PUBLIC HEARINGS

Endorsements of the project were received at the Senate hearings from the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Farmers Union, and from rural electric cooperatives and other farm organizations in every section of the country.

The committee followed the recommendation of Governor Dewey and included in the St. Lawrence resolution, as favorably reported to the Senate, 14 to 8, the Federal-State accord provisions which protect New York's rights in the power development. Under these provisions, New York State will take over the ownership and operation of the power project to be built near Massena on a self-liquidating basis. Governor Dewey had insisted upon such provisions in his exchange of telegrams with President Truman in September 1945, when certain Washington officials sought to Federalize the power development.

If the question is decided upon the facts and upon the tests applied to other river developments in other parts of the country, the St. Lawrence seaway and power project will be approved by the new Congress. Its tremendous benefits to agriculture, manufactures, and to every section of the State of New York as well as to the Nation have been established beyond dispute in engineering reports and surveys, economic studies, and the public record of the congressional hearings.

EXCERPTS FROM ANNUAL MESSAGE OF GOV. THOMAS E. DEWEY TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, JANUARY 8, 1947

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Once again the matter of the development of the St. Lawrence for the benefit of the people of this and neighboring States will be before the Federal Congress.

For many years I have held the view and advocated that the development of hydroelectric power from that great natural resource should go forward. During these years the proposal for the development of hydroelectric power and the seaway has steadily gained strength and supporters.

During the war the electric-power production of the State was stretched to its maximum. We would have been unable to meet any greater demand than was then put upon our system. The trend over the years for great electric consumption is upward. We are reaching capacity even for normal times.

It has also been forcibly borne in upon us more than once that the dependence of so much of our electric-power production on coal makes clearer the need for alternative sources for electric-power production. Moreover, the great cost of replacement of capital equipment and of expanding capital equipment in the electric-power field threatens to terminate or even reverse the uniformly decreasing cost of electricity to the consumers of this State in the future. A partial solution to all these needs is provided by utilizing to the full the waterpower of the State for the production of hydroelectric power.

I am firmly convinced that in this course of action there lies additional prosperity for all the people of the State. The Empire State is going forward and in the future it can use all the railroad facilities, all the transportation facilities, all the waterways, and all the sources of power available to it or lying at its threshold.

SENATOR FROM MISSISSIPPI

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Is the Senator about to make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. WHITE. I was about to do so, but first I intended to make a brief statement.

Mr. HATCH. Before the Senator makes a motion to adjourn, I should like to make a very brief statement.

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate today, but in connection with the matter which was discussed Saturday, and especially concerning my own position, I wish to add a statement, now that the immediate rush and emergency seem to have passed.

I wish to stress again what I tried to emphasize on Saturday, the importance of the maintenance and preservation of certain fundamental rights, which in reality are more important perhaps to the Senate than to the individual who is accused. So I am taking the liberty now, during this time when there is no need for immediate action, to make a suggestion. I make it only as a suggestion, because I think the procedure should be adopted upon the initiation of others.

My suggestion is that in connection with the charges against the Senator-elect from Mississippi, now, or very shortly, the report of the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, which seems to be the basis for the charges, be referred to the proper committee, which, under the new organization, I understand will be the Committee on Rules and Administration, and that that committee take the report, together with the report of the Committee on Campaign Expenditures, the minority views, and such other information as may properly come before it, and that the committee prefer formal and specific charges against the Senator-elect from Mississippi.

In my opinion it is of vast importance that charges be so prepared and filed, and that they be transmitted to the Senator-elect from Mississippi as quickly as possible, notwithstanding the condition of his health, in order that he may have full knowledge of the charges against him, and may prepare whatever defense he may care to submit. After that has been done and after the Senator-elect from Mississippi has returned to the Senate, as I am sure every Member of this body hopes he will, he should be accorded by the Committee on Rules and Administration, of whose jurisdiction there can be no doubt and no question, a full hearing upon the charges filed; witnesses should be brought to testify, and he should have the privilege of confronting them in person and of cross-examining them fully and, furthermore, he should, of course, be accorded the privilege of producing in his own behalf whatever witnesses or whatever evidence he might care to submit.

I suggest that after those full and orderly steps have been taken before the committee, the committee then report to the Senate its findings, and that we act then upon the ultimate question, which we must and should determine upon competent charge and competent evidence, namely, the actual guilt or innocence of the man.

When that has been done, Mr. President, I say again for myself—and I think I say for every other Member of the Senate, regardless of the side of the Chamber on which he may sit—that without politics, without partisanship, we may then vote upon the only question involved, which is whether he is guilty, and if guilty, whether his guilt has been established in accordance with fundamental American principles of right, privilege, and justice.

For myself, Mr. President, and for many others I know that if it is established that this man, or for that matter any other Member of this body, has prostituted the high office of Senator of the United States, by using it for his own personal gain or profit, that he has illegally conspired against any segment of the country, no matter what the race, or against any citizen, the judgment and verdict of the Senate will be one of guilty; but it is more important I think that the guilt be established, if there be guilt, according to correct rules of procedure than it is that he be denied a seat in this body.

Mr. President, I urge that such procedure as I have outlined be substantially followed. I am not trying to dictate the procedure, I am merely making the suggestion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did I understand the Senator from New Mexico to ask unanimous consent that an order be entered regarding this matter?

Mr. HATCH. I did not. I was merely making a suggestion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to state that such course would be inconsistent with the order entered last Saturday with reference to this entire procedure, for the reason that it was requested and ordered that the credentials of the Senator-elect from Mississippi lie on the table. That carried with it the idea that the entire proceeding, including hearings before the two committees, remain in status quo until such time as the Senator-elect could return, or until the Senate itself decided to take up the matter.

To follow the course suggested by the Senator from New Mexico would make it necessary probably for the Committee on Rules and Administration to proceed, or at least make it possible for that committee to proceed prior to the time indicated in the order of Saturday, which was, until such time as the Senator-elect from Mississippi could return; and while I appreciate the desire for prompt consideration of the matter, under the order entered Saturday I doubt very much whether the committee should proceed in the absence of the Senator-elect. I fear that under the suggestion they might feel some obligation to do so. I think that possibility should be considered before we enter on the course suggested.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from Maine yield further?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. As I stated in the beginning, I was only making a suggestion. I think that the question raised by the Senator from Kentucky is entirely appropriate, but I think it would be most unfortunate if, in the event the committee desired to follow the course I have suggested, it could not prepare the charge, and at least submit them to the Senator-elect, so that he or his counsel, during the interim, could be preparing his defense.

Of course, the situation mentioned as an obstacle could be obviated by a unanimous-consent agreement or by other action of the Senate.

PROGRAM FOR SENATE SESSIONS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I know of no other business to come immediately before the Senate, but before moving an adjournment I should like to make a brief statement as to the policy of the majority with respect to sessions of the Senate for some 2 or 3 months.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I desire to inquire whether or not it is the plan and purpose of the Senate to meet on Friday of this week.

Mr. WHITE. That matter will be covered in the statement I am about to make.

Mr. REVERCOMB. My only purpose in propounding the question is that under an engagement previously made I shall have to be absent Friday, and I wish to have permission to be absent on that day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection leave of absence is granted the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think all Senators recognize perfectly well that the legislative process divides itself into two principal phases. One is that with which committees are primarily concerned, covering the introduction of proposed legislation, its reference to appropriate committees, hearings by the committees, the laborious task of draftsmanship following the hearings, and the ultimate reporting of the legislation by the committees to the Senate. That is what I call the first phase, and it is one of the principal phases of the legislative process. The other phase involves consideration and subsequent action upon the floor.

A great deal of difficulty has been encountered in arranging hearings of committees in such a way as to avoid conflict with the sessions of the Senate, to preclude so far as possible any collision between the sessions of committees and the sessions of the main body of the Senate itself. In the report of the Special Committee on the Organization of Congress, in the consideration of what should be done to improve the efficiency of the legislative body, one of the proposals was in these terms:

> We respectfully suggest experimentation by the leadership of the two Houses in dividing the workweek, reserving 3 days for morning and afternoon hearings by committees, possibly with evening sessions on these days, and 3 days for sessions in the Chambers for legislative work. Sessions in the Chambers could be held either on three consecutive days or could alternate with days reserved for committee meetings.

That recognized the difficulty and suggested a method to minimize the conflict which we have experienced so many times between floor obligations and committee obligations. When the reorganization bill was introduced it embodied substantially the language of the report of the special committee. Section 246 of the bill as introduced in this body by Senator La Follette provided as follows:

> It is the sense of the Senate and the House of Representatives that the leadership of the respective Houses experiment with schedules for meetings of the two Houses so as to determine whether the business of the Congress may be more efficiently transacted by providing for alternate days for Chamber sessions and committee meetings, or by providing for three full days for committee meetings and three full days for sessions in the Chambers, or by providing some other schedule, including night sessions.

Those two provisions, one in the bill as introduced, and one in the report of the special committee, indicate the thought of that committee that some provision should be made so that committees might hold their hearings undisturbed, if I may use that word, by calls from the Senate floor, and so that the Senate might deliberately consider legislation once it had been reported, without constant interruptions to obtain quorums on the floor.

With these recommendations in mind, the steering committee of the majority gave some consideration last week as to what our attitude should be toward committee sessions, and we adopted the second proposition or proposal that there should be alternate days of sessions of committees and sessions of the Senate. I was authorized to say to the Senate that it would be the policy of the majority party for a couple of months or so, to a date somewhat indefinite, to move that there be sessions of the full Senate on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and that on the days between, various committees of the Senate might meet to perform their functions and discharge their responsibilities by considering proposed legislation, by having hearings, and by drafting the proposals upon which they agree.

I have in mind that there are coming ahead of us some days of unusual significance to all Members. I should want in the case of the anniversary of Lincoln's birth to depart somewhat from this program of having Senate sessions Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and permit the largest possible opportunity for Members on this side to go to their homes or elsewhere, and make their customary, and I think proper, speeches on Lincoln's Birthday. Some provision perhaps should be made for Washington's Birthday.

I have it in mind that the minority usually have either a Jackson Day or a Jefferson Day dinner, and that might suggest to certain of its members the desirability of a special dispensation with respect to Senate sessions on those occasions. But subject to those limited exceptions, I wanted to advise the Senate that under the authority of the majority steering committee I shall move that sessions adjourn from Monday to Wednesday and then from Wednesday to Friday until we have proved either the futility of the plan or until we are ready to adopt it more or less permanently.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SALTONSTALL in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The suggestion offered by the Senator from Maine was discussed in the last Congress with respect to some plan by which we could concentrate senatorial work free from committee work. Various suggestions were discussed, but none of them was ever adopted. We have been in the habit heretofore, until legislation became ready for consideration, of having what we call 3-day adjournments. I take it for granted that this program would obviate the 3-day adjournments.

Mr. WHITE. To a very large extent; yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would take the place of the 3-day adjournments which we have heretofore taken during periods when legislation was not pressing. It seems to me the plan is worth trying, and it may be possible to work it out for the entire session, although I would not be willing to consent to it for longer than, say, a couple of months to see how it works.

So far as Lincoln Day absenteeism is concerned, we have no objection to any deviation from this program that would permit our friends to get back to Lincoln. There was a suggestion made here the other day that Senators on the other side of the aisle wanted to get back to Lincoln, and I am all for it. I want the Republican Party to get back to Lincoln.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the closer the party gets back to Lincoln the nearer it will come to Jefferson.

Mr. WHITE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I simply wish to say that the Senator from Kentucky has just now "beat me to the punch."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think there will be no difficulty about arranging for Washington's Birthday and for Lincoln's Birthday. So far as Jackson is concerned, the Democrats have always celebrated Jackson Day on the 8th day of January, today, which is the day of the Battle of New Orleans.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator from Kentucky is celebrating it now.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have made no special arrangement for celebrating Jackson Day, except that I am to address a Democratic club in Baltimore on Saturday night at a Jackson Day banquet, to which I am happy to invite all my Republican friends.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator would have a highly intelligent audience if we accepted.

Mr. BARKLEY. But in April I think it is planned to have a number of Jefferson Day celebrations throughout the country, and I am sure that Jefferson and Lincoln and Washington and Jackson will all be maintained upon an equal footing with respect to the work of the Senate and the convenience of individual Senators.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I wanted to say for the benefit of my friend the Senator from Kentucky that I hope his statement, which I shall designate as exhibit A, is evidence that the great party to which he belongs, of which he has been majority leader in the Senate for so many years, and so successfully, will be bound to return to the principles and teachings and tenets of Thomas Jefferson. When that day comes it will be a great day for this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that we have never departed from them, because Jefferson was the outstanding liberal of his day, and we have always adhered to the liberal policies which were advocated by the original liberal, Thomas Jefferson, which were not altogether dissimilar to the liberality of the founder of the Republican Party, Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I merely desire to say that, as I understand, while the Senate will meet Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, there is nothing to prevent committee meetings being held in the mornings of those days before 12 o'clock.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Ohio is correct in that statement.

Mr. TAFT. But the idea was that on Tuesdays and Thursdays the committee chairmen can arrange for all day hearings, knowing that the committees can sit and hold hearings for the whole day, and thus accomplish three times what can be accomplished if there is only an hour or so in the morning to be given to committee hearings before the Senate meets. There is no reason, however, why such meetings could not be supplemented on the days when the Senate meets, so long as the committees do not meet while the Senate is in session.

Mr. WHITE. If I may say another word, Mr. President, I think we all recognize that this plan is experimental. We may feel after we have lived under it for a while that it has so much of merit that we can adopt it permanently, or it may be that we shall discard it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may offer the suggestion to the Senator from Ohio that except when committees were holding continuous hearings day after day, Tuesdays and Thursdays have been generally the customary days for meetings of committees to take place.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, while we are discussing the greater efficiency of our body and its functioning, I should like some consideration to be given to the Senate having a regular lunch hour. I know that in many cases Senators are away from the floor when important matters are being discussed, and we must hurry away from our meals, perhaps to answer a call for a quorum, perhaps two or three times during the meal, which is probably not the best thing for one's health. Ofttimes a Senator or Senators will be discussing an important matter, and nearly all the Senators will take advantage of such a time to do downstairs and try to have their lunch, which means that we are not giving to such matter the consideration and the attendance it deserves.

Mr. President, I simply ask consideration of the suggestion that the Senate meet earlier in the morning, 10:30, or perhaps 11 o'clock, and, let us say, continue until 1 o'clock, and then perhaps have a lunch hour from 1 o'clock to 2 o'clock, or perhaps meet at 10 o'clock and continue in session until 1 o'clock, and then take a recess until 2 o'clock, and come back at 2 o'clock and continue in session until time for adjournment arrives. I suggest we not have any committee meetings on the days when we have sessions of the Senate.

I want to commend the majority leader and his associates for what they are doing with respect to the procedure of the Senate. I think what they have proposed is very wholesome and salutary. I wished, however, to submit my suggestion in respect to the procedure.

I desire to make another suggestion. It may be due to the lack of acuteness of our hearing or to the bad acoustics of this Chamber, but frequently it is impossible to hear what our colleagues say. I remember when I first came to the Senate I heard a Senator on this side of the Chamber, in referring to another Senator, say, "The Senator has been here 8 years, during the time I have been here, and I have never yet heard a word he has said." Frequently, because of the poor acoustics in the Chamber, we simply do not hear what our fellow Senators are saying. I hope attention may be given to improvement of the acoustics of the Chamber. Perhaps the study which was previously initiated is being continued.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Under the leadership of the late Senator Andrews of Florida complete plans have been made for the renovation of the Senate Chamber. In preparing those plans the best acoustical experts of the United States were consulted. However, they have a very difficult problem. As Senators know, the Chamber will be entirely changed. The skylight will be removed. There will be a low flat dome instead of the present skylight, and we hope it may provide very much better acoustical qualities. I believe that the specifications are practically completed. The work is expected to be done this summer when the Senate adjourns. But there are no plans for improving the acoustics during this session, except to speak louder.

Mr. PEPPER. I am proud of the association of my late colleague, Florida's distinguished Senator, with this project. It was very close to his heart. I hope the plans will proceed with all possible dispatch. Meanwhile, I hope the able majority leader and the others of us individually will try to speak louder, and encourage our colleagues to speak sufficiently loud so that at least what may be said will be heard, whether it is regarded or not.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, both suggestions of the able Senator from Florida are worthy of consideration, and I have no doubt they will be in the minds of Senators as we proceed during this period of experimentation.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the sessions of the Senate on Friday of this week, and on Monday of next week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, January 10, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, the Lord of life and light, as we pray at Thy altar, hear Thy children. This day is for us; let us not make our hours vague, difficult, or unprofitable. So touch the impulses of our souls that we may justly claim the glorious right to live and to win the approval of a good name, which is the richest achievement of all human aspirations. It is not just what we do that constitutes the best benefactions to our fellow citizens, but how we make our way through the entanglements of daily experiences. We pray Thee to make us calm and courageous, keeping the faith, never allowing our sense of righteousness to become weak or vitiated. Always help us to appreciate that nothing of great worth can be accomplished with half a mind, a faint heart, or with a lame endeavor. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

To the Congress of the United States:

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 8, 1947.

THE LATE HONORABLE BENJAMIN IRVING TAYLOR AND THE LATE HONORABLE BENJAMIN LEWIS FAIRCHILD

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House the death, since our last meeting, of two former Members who were residents of the Twenty-eighth District of New York—the Honorable Benjamin Irving Taylor and the Honorable Benjamin Lewis Fairchild.

Ben Taylor served the people of the then Twenty-fifth New York District as a Member of the Democratic Party from 1912 to 1914, which was but one interlude in the 40 years as a public servant of this descendant of Alexander Hamilton and the chief archer and military adviser to William the Conquerer. Mr. Taylor's first elective office following his graduation from Columbia University and practice of the law was as supervisor for the town of Harrison in 1905. Serving 8 years in this post and having won for himself recognition throughout New York State as an expert on town law and administration, Supervisor Taylor came to Congress in 1914 and, following this term, retired as an officeholder to return to the practice of the law until 1922, when he was again elected supervisor for Harrison. Altogether, he served 15 terms in Westchester County administration as supervisor and chairman of the county board. During his incumbency, the town of Harrison won the reputation as the most efficiently governed municipality in the State. It has been well said that Harrison is a monument and memorial to Ben Taylor's zeal, foresight, and development. He was lovingly known as "Mr. Harrison" by grateful constituents and neighbors.

In 1929 Supervisor Taylor left the Democratic ranks and formally declared himself a Republican, drawing his support for elective office from friends in both political parties and continuing his fine service to the county and the township which marked his long career. He retired and did not seek reelection last year due to ill health.

Benjamin L. Fairchild, who resided in and developed Pelham Manor in Westchester County, was a member of the World War I Congress representing the Twenty-fourth New York District. He was returned to the House in 1921 to serve until 1927 but he originally came to Congress in 1895 as the Representative of the then Sixteenth Congressional District of New York. Mr. Fairchild was a Republican.

The son of a veteran of the Civil War, Mr. Fairchild was brought to Washington as a child where his father was recuperating from war wounds. At 14 he worked as a draftsman in the Patent Office and later was a clerk in the Treasury Department. In 1883 he was graduated from Columbian University, now George Washington University.

His introduction nearly two decades ago of an amendment to the Constitution providing that no President should serve more than two terms is indicative that he was far ahead of his time, a progressive and far-sighted legislator.

THE LATE HON. CHARLES H. MARTIN

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce the death of a former Member of this House, Hon. Charles H. Martin, whose death occurred at his home in Portland, Oreg., on September 22, 1946. General Martin served in the House of Representatives from March 4, 1931, to January 3, 1935, representing the Third Congressional District of Oregon, which I now have the honor to represent. General Martin was one of Oregon's most outstanding citizens, having served his State and Nation in many capacities with great distinction. He was appointed to West Point after receiving his primary education in Carmi, Ill., and at Ewing College. After being commissioned a second lieutenant in 1887, he was assigned to duty at Vancouver Barracks, Washington Territory. He became a major in 1910 and saw service as a lieutenant colonel on the Mexican border in 1915–17. At the outbreak of World War I he became a colonel and later brigadier general.

General Martin, on his retirement from active military service, took up his residence in Portland and took an active interest in public and civic affairs, being subsequently elected as a Representative to Congress from the Portland, Oreg., district, where he served with distinction and credit not only to himself but to his

State. Subsequently the people of Oregon called him to the Governor's chair, where his administration was characterized by a forthright program for the development of the great resources of the State of Oregon. Through a long and distinguished career, both in the military service and private life, General Martin endeared himself to the people of Oregon and to all with whom he came in contact. His passing was an occasion of deep regret to all of his many friends and associates.

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a set of resolutions of the Poweshiek County Farm Bureau.

Mr. CURTIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a portion of a communication from the railway commission of Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the rehabilitation committee of the American Legion, Department of Connecticut.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an address delivered at the annual convention of the Inland Empire Waterways Association at Portland, Oreg., last October by Dr. Wilson Compton, president of Washington State College.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an item from the Arizona Farmer.

Mr. LYLE (at the request of Mr. COMBS) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I obtained permission to insert my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter. I am advised by the Public Printer that it exceeds by approximately one-half page the limitation set by the Joint Committee on Printing, and that it will cost $150. Notwithstanding the excess I ask that it may be extended.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the excess, without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances: in the first to include an editorial which appeared in the Brooklyn Eagle on August 12, 1946; in the second to include a sermon delivered by the president of St. John's University in Brooklyn recently; in the third to include a letter which he received from the committee chairman of the Navy Day celebration held at Borough Hall, Brooklyn, N. Y.; and in the fourth to include an editorial and an article which appeared in the New York Times on January 6, 1947.

THE HONORABLE JAMES F. BYRNES

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that practically every Member—I will say every Member—of this House received the news of the necessity for the resignation of Secretary of State Byrnes with deep regret, just as I did; deep regret not only that the President, this country—yes, the world—must be denied the valuable service of this great statesman at this crucial moment, a man who will undoubtedly go down in history as one of the great Secretaries of State of all time, but deep regret also of the reason for his resignation, his health. I am thoroughly convinced that had Secretary of State Byrnes not felt it absolutely necessary that he resign for that reason he would not have done so. I am equally convinced that the President would not have accepted his resignation on any other condition.

Mr. Speaker, since it has been necessary for him to resign, I am sure that the entire membership of the House joins me in expressing the very sincere hope that now that he will be relieved of the strenuous duties he has so very ably performed and the great pressure which has been upon him every single minute since he entered upon the tenure of his office, with the rest to which he is so justly entitled his health will greatly improve and that he may remain with us for many, many years and afford the President and the country the benefit of his valuable advice as one of our great elder statesmen.

Since it is necessary for Secretary of State Byrnes to go, however, I consider that the country and the world are fortunate indeed in having such a man as General Marshall to take over the reins, a man who is so highly regarded by both the civilian and the military population, not only of this country but throughout the world, a man whose name commands respect in military, diplomatic, and civilian life wherever the sun shines.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on today, after disposition of the regular business on the Speaker's table and after any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to speak for 10 minutes on the resignation of my constituent, James F. Byrnes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE HONORABLE JAMES F. BYRNES

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, may I thank the gentleman from Alabama for the generous remarks he has made about the outstanding services of South Carolina's most distinguished citizen. Secretary Byrnes was not only South Carolina's number one citizen but he ranks as statesman and citizen number two of the Nation. In addition to that his name must be placed in the front rank of the citizens and statesmen of the world. No man ever appointed to the office of Secretary of State has grasped the duties of that office more quickly, worked more untiringly, nor enunciated its policies more clearly, ably, and firmly than has Mr. Byrnes.

No man went into that office at a more critical time; no man, no secretary, met more obstacles on the diplomatic front of the world; no man accomplished more in the same length of time. Many were this man's accomplishments in the legislative, judicial, and executive field; but his greatest monument will be the foundation of the house of international understanding and cooperation which he so carefully and firmly laid.

We who admired Jimmie Byrnes and were proud to call him friend know that he would not have stepped down from that exalted position if it had not been for good, patriotic reasons. We know that he would not have stepped out had he not known that the man who would succeed him was possessed of preeminent qualification for the position, and a man who would carry on his policies.

I congratulate the President on his selection of General Marshall for this arduous task. He is a great soldier, a great diplomat, and a great American.

MINORITY MEMBERS OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 41) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Kerr, North Carolina; George H. Mahon, Texas; Harry R. Sheppard, California; Albert Thomas, Texas; Joe Hendricks, Florida; Michael J. Kirwan, Ohio; W. F. Norrell, Arkansas; Albert Gore, Tennessee; Jamie L. Whitten, Mississippi; Thomas D'Alesandro, Jr., Maryland; George W. Andrews, Alabama; John J. Rooney, New York; J. Vaughan Gary, Virginia.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address by Dr. Ruth Miller Steese.

Mr. O'HARA asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

THE BUTTER MARKET SITUATION

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, during the past few days the press has carried the story of the butter market in New York City. The January 5 edition of the New York Times says:

was a "battle of giants" in the market. When the league determined to hold up the price, large dealers bought "spot" contracts for more than a million pounds on the Chicago market and dumped them on the New York market, trade sources said.

The formula or timetable for using butter prices as part of the process of arriving at fluid milk prices under the milk marketing acts, has always placed butter in a position of receiving the wrath of the would-be price reducers. In fact, before the war, fluid milk was bringing the producer as much as $3.23 per hundredweight in the milkshed when milk sold for butter was bringing less than $1 per hundredweight. Twenty-nine percent of the milk might have been benefited, but 71 percent had to pay the fiddler.

There are, however, two other very important points brought out by this recent episode in the butter market.

One is—just exactly how does it happen that the milk producers represented by the Dairyman's League are to be threatened with violation of the Commodity Act for supporting a price for their products, when evidently the dealer can with impunity try to break the market without fear, without intimidation, and without threat of a term in the jailhouse?

I do not know whether or not the Commodity Act was violated, but any fair-minded person knows that if it is a violation to strengthen the market, it should be a violation for the dealers to dump the million pounds on the market to break the market. Or, in other words, is the speculator to be heralded as a great public benefactor for breaking a market, but the producer whose labor, toil, and sweat went into producing his product is to be intimidated, publicized, and threatened? If the Commodity Act works this way, it had better be amended, and that at once.

And point No. 2, I wonder how they are going to explain the market manipulations and bucket-shop operations of governmental agencies—one after the other. The Government-subsidized DPMA has, in fact, for years been buying and selling butter. Have they rigged the prices down or up? If the DPMA has not been indicted, is it because the price of butter has been rigged downward? The avowed purpose of the DPMA was to stabilize butter prices. How could they stabilize the butter market if they did not support the market by purchases that would maintain or increase the price? Can the DPMA operate with governmental sanction but the Dairyman's League face legal obstacles for performing a similar service to the producers? And what about the wartime rye market manipulations?

Are we to believe then that speculators can legally rig a market down without fear of the law, and that Government agencies can strengthen or weaken a market and all is well, while if a group of New York farmers try to maintain their market they are to be sued, fined, threatened, and jailed?

This whole market for agricultural products must be viewed in the light of the law in regard to the Steagall amendment. The law, if followed, will compel purchases or loans to support or maintain farm prices. Will the Commodity Act be used to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from following the provisions of the Steagall amendment?

Let us have the answers and let us have them now.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and includue an article recently written by George Fielding Eliot.

GOV. EARL WARREN, OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday on the floor the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] informed the House that there are two very fine candidates for President in 1948. I cannot let this opportunity pass without reminding you that the State of California has an excellent Presidential candidate also in its Gov. Earl Warren, who succeeded in being reelected in the June primaries of both the Republican and Democratic Parties in a State where a million and a half people from all other States in the Union have come to live within the past 4 years. We believe he is possessed of all the qualifications necessary. He is the only Californian governor reelected to succeed himself with the exception of the late Honorable Senator Hiram Johnson. I just want to say, "Watch the Golden State in '48."

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended 3 minutes, so that I may have 18 minutes in all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PARTITION FOR PALESTINE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, it is reported that at the next Cabinet meeting on Thursday the British Government will announce the partition of Palestine into Jewish and Arab states. If true, and determination is at the sticking point, these are happy tidings. If the partition is equitable and just and permits of proper growth and peaceable development by Jew and Arab in the Middle East, partition should be accepted by all.

Great Britain now has the glorious opportunity to bring peace to the Middle East, to redeem in some measure the pledges she made when she became the mandatory power for Palestine. Palestine is presently a besieged country; acts of terror have destroyed all semblance of stability. Acts of reprisal have been visited by British soldiers upon the innocent in the desire for bloodthirsty revenge.

The Arabs will not yield to the demands for a Jewish national homeland in Palestine. The Jews will continue to resist any and all efforts to keep them a minority people without national sovereignty in the Holy Land. Thousands of displaced Jews face another despairing winter in DP camps which are padlocked by British policy in Palestine. A solution does exist which moderates of all three entities—the Jews, the Arabs, and the British—will find acceptable, practicable, and closest to any legal, ethical, and moral justification that can be reached in this chaotic, strife-torn world. The solution lies in the partition of Palestine into a Jewish state and an Arab state with each in control of and fully responsible for the economic, political, and social development of their own spheres.

By and large there are relatively few who do not deplore the terroristic activities of the two underground organizations in Palestine, the Stern and the Irgum Zvai Leumi groups. The Haganah, which is the defense group of Palestine, is attempting to exert every influence in Palestine to stop these unauthorized bombings and killings. Happily, word reaches us this morning that a truce on violence has been declared, awaiting the London Conference. The Jewish Agency for Palestine has brought its influence to bear to halt these incidents. But before a cure can be effected, the cause must be determined. We must remember the frustration, the bewilderment, the despair in the hearts and minds of the Palestinian Jew. We must keep in mind all the promises and pledges that were made by Britain to the Jews only to be broken. We must remember that in 1939 when Jews were frantically trying to escape from the scourge of Hitler, Britain closed the doors of Palestine and shut off the main avenue of escape, thus condemning to death thousands upon thousands of innocent Jews. We must remember that for a very brief period when the Labor government came into power, the hopes of the Jews flared up again. They had every reason to believe that the Labor Party, which had pledged itself since 1922 to the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine, would now recognize the legal and moral obligations of Britain. Instead, they found in the Labor government an implacable, inflexible opposition to their most cherished aims. Jews who sought to gain a new life, new dignity in Palestine, who, indeed, had no place else to go, were placed behind barbed wire on the island of Cyprus. Although Bevin had promised to carry out the recommendations of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine if a unanimous report were rendered, the recommendations of this committee were cast aside by Britain, Labor Britain at that. The Jews in Palestine, heavy with the knowledge that 6,000,000 of their brethren had perished, had once again to watch the survivors crowded into camps without hope of knitting together the broken strands of their broken lives.

Here is Palestine, which the Jews had brought to life again by reclamation of its desert soil, by the building of cities, by the inauguration of industries, by the introduction into the Middle East of the arts, sciences, and medicine; here was Palestine, making ready to receive the dispossessed and defenseless, and the government which had professed to be its friend these many years had turned coat. It is little wonder, then, that human endurance had been stretched to the breaking point. Despair brought terror.

Now, the opportunity arises for Britain to act with honor, to gain for herself the good will of the world and to gain for herself stanch allies in the Middle East. Should an equitable partition of Palestine result, peace, prosperity, and stability would flow into the Middle East. How many times does Britain have to learn the same lesson again? India, Ireland, our own American Colonies have shown Britain the folly of suppression without attempting to remove the cause of disorder and defiance. I think the British publication, the Manchester Guardian, put it most forcefully:

> The British Government seems happily convinced that what it is doing in Palestine is right. If Jewish refugees from Europe have to be shipped off to Cyprus it is unfortunate, but since they had no business to go to Palestine in the first place, it is not the fault of the British Government. If some of them in their desperation jump into the sea and try to swim ashore, they must be hauled out again. It only proves what obstinate, exasperating people these Jews are. If one or two get killed in the process it is too bad. We are a humane nation and do not like causing unnecessary suffering, but, of course, law and order must come first. And so it goes on. Having once persuaded ourselves what we are doing is morally justified, we can, with typical Anglo-Saxon complacency, carry out a policy which would shock us very much indeed if it were carried out by anyone else.

In partitioning Palestine into Arab and Jewish states, each would assume full responsibility for the conduct of its affairs; both would achieve self-government with all its concomitant duties, privileges, and obligations. The tensions would cease between the two peoples, the fear having been removed that one would dominate the other. There would be no danger or threat of one group dispossessing the other. The energies that are now directed toward political friction would be bent to peaceable pursuits in building the Middle East, raising its standards of living, developing its irrigation projects; in erecting schools, houses, and business enterprises; in farming; in short, in carrying forward a program of progress in the Middle East. The Palestine Arab would find political and social expression in his own state, as would the Palestine Jew. The acts of outlaw gangs that are creating so much havoc would cease. There would be other work to do, happy, fruitful, constructive work, for both the Arabs and the Jews, each attempting to develop a state of which each can be rightfully proud.

The Jews of Palestine would gain a voice in the United Nations. The Jews in the displaced persons' camps would be brought into the Jewish state with rejoicing as welcome and contributing citizens thereof. Jewish homelessness would cease to agitate the world. Partition means dignity and self-determination for both the Arabs and the Jews, and it means for Britain the friendship of the Middle East, an external line of defense, since by treaty and trade agreements she can gain bases and entry if she fears attack. Certainly a turbulent Middle East will avail Britain very little in any military conflict. Witness Burma. Britain should consider this well. In enlightened self-interest, she can only tighten her ties with the Middle East by loosening them.

The boundaries can so be fixed in Palestine as to create a viable state in an adequate portion for the Jews and a viable adequate portion for the Arabs. Those areas now closely populated by the Jews should be retained by the Jews. Upper Galilee, eastern and western Galilee should be included, making possible large scale irrigation projects which would benefit all of Palestine and not only the Jewish portion thereof. The seacoast region from Haifa down to Gaza, now heavily settled by Jews should likewise be included, but not the port of Jaffa. The Negev area, which is the southern triangular part of Palestine, should likewise be included in the Jewish area. This is completely desert area which has no population to speak of. The Jews of Palestine could redeem this land as they have other portions.

The central part of Palestine which is now heavily populated by the Arabs should be given to the Arab state. Care should be taken to provide the Arabs with access to the Mediterranean. It might well be feasible for the Arab state to be joined with Transjordania which was originally a portion of Palestine. Iraq would greatly benefit thereby as well since through such amalgam, Iraq could gain an opening to the Mediterranean.

These are merely suggestions as to how Palestine may equitably be partitioned. These are not rigid lines to be laid down, but they do constitute a working plan and a concrete approach. Naturally, under any agreement reached, the Holy places of all three major religions in the Holy Land should be placed under international authority.

It is imperative that Britain recognize the necessity for partition. Decidedly we cannot overlook the importance of achieving peace in the Middle East if we are bent on world peace. The deadlock in the Middle East must be broken.

Self-government for the Jews and self-government for the Arabs with each controlling its domestic and foreign policies, including immigration, peace in the Middle East, development in the Middle East of a progressive civilization, the lifting of a burden from Britain and the redemption of her pledge, the rescue and rehabilitation of Jewish refugees now languishing in DP camps, all these are spelled out by a workable partition of Palestine.

In reviewing both the Jewish and Arab case, we must keep in mind that the historical connection of Jewry with the Holy Land has never been broken and that connection has been recognized internationally by 53 nations including the United States. Both the Balfour Declaration and the mandate guaranteed a national homeland to the Jews in Palestine. Palestine was once a Jewish state; it has never in history been an Arab one. Palestine was conquered by the Arabs in the seventh century and became a province of the caliphs, but it never had a significant political role. In 1517 it was conquered by the Turks and until after World War I it remained a province of the Ottoman Empire governed by a Turkish administration. Therefore, in discussing sovereignty of Arabs and Jews, it has never been a question of restoring sovereignty to the Palestine Arab which he never had. The Arabs now have independent monarchies in Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, and Trans-Jordan and two republics in Syria and Lebanon. The Arabian territory consists of 1,288,954 square miles for a population of no more than 14,000,000. All this was made possible for Arabia by the Allied victory in the First World War. The only exception in the territory that was granted independence was the 10,000 square miles of Palestine which was specifically excluded so as to make possible the establishment of a Jewish national home therein.

The Arab world, therefore, cannot complain with any justification that a partition of Palestine which would give the Jews a viable state in a portion thereof would be unfair. The Jews, who can go nowhere in the world save Palestine, have the promise of the world, a legally sanctioned right. If the Jews of Palestine accept a reasonable partition, the Arab world in a spirit of mutual cooperation, for the sake of the whole population of the Middle East, for social, economic, and political welfare of their people, for the sweet name of peace, must alike accept a fair partition.

Again, I say, this is Britain's chance. Let her seize this opportunity to act with honor, with justice, and with conscience and at the coming conference make partial amends for the suffering of the Jewish people, make adjustment for the sake of the impoverished Arab people by consenting to a feasible, practical plan of partition for Palestine. Certainly the legal precedent already exists in the case of Trans-Jordan, which, though once a part of the Palestine mandate, has now been granted independence as a sovereign state.

There is none so blind as he who will not see. Surely, surely, this time Britain will see the light.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman approve of the act of the Jews recently when they kidnaped and whipped a British officer?

Mr. CELLER. Of course, I do not. I deplore all terrorism, whether it is on the part of the British or on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ARENDS). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I sought to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the majority and minority Supreme Court opinions on the portal-to-portal case, which exceeded the cost somewhat, as I am informed by the Public Printer. I believe the cost is justified, however, and I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the fact it exceeds the allowable cost the extension may be permitted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

TIME TO PASS THE SPINACH

INTRODUCTION

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, when the Selective Service System appeared before the Appropriations Committee in June of 1946 a chance remark by one of the officials of Selective Service induced me to ask a number of questions concerning the findings of the Selective Service System with respect to the physical well-being of young men who had been examined for military service and who for one reason and another were rejected. The matter seems of such moment that I requested an assembly of the findings of Selective Service in order that they might be carefully examined and evaluated. These findings were compiled and completed in December of 1946 and reveal some astonishing facts.

A BRIEF SUMMARY

By way of a brief summary let me point out from these findings that by August 1, 1945, about seventeen and one-third million men between the ages of 18 and 37 had been examined for military service. Manifestly this group can be considered as the robust segment of our male population and now for some bad news. Out of this number about five and one-quarter million were rejected. Think of it! More than 30 out of every 100 young men in this age bracket from 18 to 37 were examined for military duty and then rejected. As one drops down into the ripe old age bracket of 34 to 37 as indicated in the attached table more than 48 out of 100 were rejected. It makes one pause and think of what the poet once asked under the rhetorical question, "Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

SOME ODDITIES

It is a bit odd that 43 out of every 100 young Tarheels from the State of North Carolina should be rejected compared with only 25 out of every 100 from the plains of Kansas. It is difficult to account for the fact that there were but 23 rejects out of every 100 in New Jersey compared with 44 out of 100 in the palmetto State of South Carolina or why should so rugged a jurisdiction as Maine account for 30 rejects out of every 100 examined compared to a State like Florida where the enervating climate accounted for 35 out of every 100.

AND WHY

Take a look at table No. 3. There you will find the whole challenging story. Out of every 1,000 examined more than 119 had eye defects. Despite the fact that as a nation we use $40,000,000 worth of tooth paste, tooth powder, tooth brushes, mouth washes, and whatnot every year, 116 out of every 1,000 young men exhibited defective teeth. Our per capita consumption of shoes exceeds by far that of any other nation on earth, including health shoes, arch supports, bunion pads, custom-built shoes, and whatnot. In fact we use 400,000,000 pairs of shoes annually and yet 90 out of 1,000 young men examined had defects of the feet. Now notice the cardiovascular cases. As you well know these are included in the common appellation of heart disease. More than 57 out of every 1,000 young men had defective tickers. Who says that heart disease belongs to old age?

TAKE IT BY STATES

The break-down by States in table 3 is especially revealing. Consider the staggering number of young men in whom there was found mental defects.

Alabama seems to lead the list with 133 per 1,000. Virginia shows 106 per 1,000, Michigan 60 per 1,000, and New Hampshire 93 per 1,000. Now consider VD. To be sure VE-day and VJ-day have come and gone but VD-day is still here. In the District of Columbia—the Nation's capital—more than 102 out of every 1,000 who were examined for military service revealed syphilis. In Florida the syphilis rate was more than 142 out of every 1,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Please let me pursue this one step further.

Mr. RANKIN. I just want to say to the gentleman that he is doing an injustice to the white people of those Southern States by not calling attention to the real facts. Now, if the gentleman will break that down by races he will present a different picture.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is all broken down.

Mr. RANKIN. All right, but the gentleman has not said so in his speech so far.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman raises a fair point there, and I shall insert tables which will break the whole thing down by States so that everybody can see. Unfortunately, with the limitation of time, as the gentleman knows, it becomes impossible to set out all these States.

NOT A PRETTY PICTURE

Well there it is fresh from the files of the Selective Service System and it is not a very pretty picture—more than five and one-fourth million young Americans in the very prime of life so defective either physically or mentally that they could not be used for military service. And what shall be said of the millions over the age of 37 who, according to the age ratios which are set out in table No. 1, must necessarily show an even greater proportion of defects? If that segment of our male population over age 37 could have been examined it would have presented a truly shocking picture if the ratios hold good. All these people are a part of our population. They are here with us. They are alive. They will carry on for many years with defective eyes, with bad teeth, with heart disease, with troublesome feet, and the rest of these ailments—these young men who could not be used for military service. Do we propose to embalm these figures and to say in our most casual and complacent manner, "Well, of course, it is too bad but then—that's just one of those things," or do we propose to do something about it?

NATIONAL DEFENSE

We hear so much of national defense. In this new Congress billions will be appropriated for equipment, research, matériel, weapons, battleships, and what not, but what are they all worth without manpower that is physically and mentally effective? Human beings are the first line of defense and the problems disclosed by the findings of the Selective Service System cry out in a loud voice for immediate and vigorous attention.

HERE ARE THE DATA

I am appending the full report of the Selective Service System dated December 13, 1946, which was forwarded over the signature of Director Lewis B. Hershey:

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE REGISTRANTS DURING WORLD WAR II

Introduction: The statistical information contained herein concerns (a) rejection rates and (b) causes of rejection of Selective Service registrants. In some cases data are available for the period 1940 to the summer of 1945, in other cases for only part of this period. The information comes from tabulations of the results of physical examinations conducted by Selective Service local board physicians and by the physicians at the Armed Forces Induction Stations. The tabulations were produced for such administrative purposes as estimating manpower availability, recommending changes in physical examination policy or standards, and bringing greater uniformity in examining procedure.

Rejection rates (1940–45): Rejection rates for men 18 through 37 years of age who had been examined by August 1, 1945, are given in table 1. By that date an estimated 17,384,700 men of these ages had been examined and 5,249,200 were still classified by Selective Service local boards as unfit for military service. This represents a 30-percent rejection rate.

As expected, the rejection rate increased with the age of the men examined. Those under 26 years of age had a rejection rate of 23 percent, whereas the rejection rate of those 34 through 37 years of age was 49 percent (table 1).

Rejection rates by States are shown in table 2. They are based on the same data as is table 1 and represent the number of men 18–37 years of age on August 1, 1945, who had been examined and either found acceptable, or rejected. Rejection rates range from 23.0 percent in New Jersey to 44.2 percent in South Carolina. Less than half of the States had rejection rates above the national average of 30.2 percent.

Defects of examined men: At the end of each examination a physician summarized the men's defects on a special part of the examination form. Tabulations derived from these summaries provide the basis for determining how many men per 1,000 examined had eye defects or hernias or any other defect. Table 3 shows this information for the five most frequently recorded defects for the continental United States and for each State. It should be pointed out, however, that these defects are not always serious enough to warrant rejection. Furthermore, some physicians may have summarized defects more completely than others.

The total frequency of defects among all examined registrants for the period 1940–43 was 1,105.7 per 1,000 men, or an average of 1.1 defects per man. The five defects most frequently recorded in the continental United States were: Eyes, 119.6 per 1,000 examined; teeth, 116.1; feet, 90.1; musculoskeletal, 87.5; and cardiovascular defects, 57.5. Rates per 1,000 men examined ranged from 729.8 in Kansas to 2,453.4 in Vermont.

Principal causes of rejections: A third important consideration is the main cause for each man's rejection. Such information is available for three time periods: the peacetime period 1940–41, the early war period 1942–43, and the year 1944 in the later war period. Some of the differences between these periods are due to the different average ages of the men examined, to the varying proportion of men who were being resubmitted for induction, and, of most importance, to changes in physical standards for induction. For example, teeth and eye defects which were principal causes for rejection in 1941 were not in 1943 and succeeding years. These comparisons are shown in table 4, which gives the ten principal causes for rejection at local boards and induction stations for each of these time periods.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I take this time because of the fact that we do not have a lot of work planned since it is necessary for the leaders to make committee assignments so that we can get the wheels running for the best interests of our country.

May I take this occasion to wish for the Republican Party, for the Democratic Party, for the Speaker, and for all those associated with us in public office, a happy, happy New Year. May we be able to assume the responsibilities that are going to be ours during the Eightieth Congress.

I wish to speak to you for a few minutes in reference to labor-management relations and our Government. This has been a very ticklish question in the last few years for a great many Members of Congress, because many Members have been too prone to think of the things that are said on the floor of the House that are going to mean votes for us, rather than say the things that we believe in or that are for the best interests of our country.

Looking over the membership of the House, and thinking of the votes of many Members of the last Congress, I see that a lot of them who voted differently than I did are not here today. I would be very foolish if I said I was sorry that they are not here in Congress, because I am not. I think we have to come to a conclusion as to what is the best thing for America and then do it. Let the chips fall where they may. I am glad the people of this country left back home those Members who were not reelected, because the people have come to a realization that we must work, earn, and save if we are going to make America a greater Nation and keep America safe. We must stop boondoggling and pussyfooting like the New Deal has been doing.

The vote in November shows that the American people are sick and tired of trying to have every person get a living off the Government without doing anything to earn it.

I can remember very well when we discussed the Wagner Act. When that act was passed there were five reasons, as I stated on the floor, why it was good for labor or why labor wanted it, but there was not one reason why management would want that act. For that reason, I thought it was a poor bill and would create more strikes in the country in the future than we had had in the past.

I will never forget my good friend, Billy Connery, who was then in charge of the bill, and who has now gone to his reward. I think Billy meant exactly what he said, that it would help, aid, and assist in curbing strikes, but the fact of the matter is that we have had many more strikes since the act was enacted than before. I am glad to see that my observation at that time was correct. Now the act should be changed.

Let me show you how many man-days have been lost since 1936. In that year we lost 789,000 man-days; in 1937, 1,861,000; in 1938, 688,000; in 1939, 1,171,000; in 1940, 577,000; in 1941, 2,363,000; in 1942, 840,000; in 1943, 1,981,000; in 1944, 2,116,000; and in 1945, 3,467,000. I do not have the figures for 1946, but there were a great many more in that year than in any year previous to that time. So the Wagner Act and the support of the Administration gave us trouble and vexation between labor and management.

Now it is up to you and me to change the act giving management and labor the same rights—the same consideration and a 50–50 break; no more and no less.

It has been observed that there are people in labor unions who do not like the conditions we have been working under in the last few years. I insert in the RECORD at this point for the information of the House and the general public the results of the R. C. Dunn Survey, of Greenwich, Conn., which specializes in the field and which reviewed the Gallup polls of union members in 1945, which showed as follows:

Fifty-four percent against closed shop; 39 percent for.

Fifty-eight percent against union contributions to campaign funds; 24 percent for.

SEVENTY PERCENT FOR "COOLING" PERIOD

Seventy percent for cooling-off period and fact-finding to help avoid strike.

Seventy-one percent for making unions financially accountable.

Sixty-four percent for law prohibiting strikes in war plants; 26 percent against.

Forty-nine percent for law to stop "featherbedding"; 26 percent against.

Summing up, a Gallup poll in 1945 stated: "The practices and policies of labor unions by no means meet the approval of the majority of American workers, or even of labor-union members themselves."

It would seem that facts such as these would impress Members of Congress more deeply than either the accusation that they are out to "break the unions" or that any really restrictive law will dangerously promote communism. If either the President or the Republicans let stuff like that affect them, they will deserve little, indeed, from the country.

You can see therefore that the membership of the unions do not agree with the things that the union heads themselves are doing.

Today I received a letter from one of my constituents who is a laboring man. He writes me as follows:

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RICH: I am what is commonly called a workingman, being employed as a machinist in a local industry.

Last November I voted for you to represent me in the United States Congress. As that Representative I desire that you vote for the following:

1. The repeal of the Wagner labor law.

2. The open shop, or the right of a man to work when, where, and for whom he pleases without interference from or being forced to pay to a labor union a fee for the privilege of working.

3. The abolition of the picket line, including protection for those who desire to work.

4. Equal responsibility for unions and management, including financial reports by the unions.

5. The abolition of labor monopolies.

6. A secret ballot by all union members before a strike can be called.

7. To make it unlawful for a union member to intimidate his fellow worker.

8. The right to sue a labor union for damages.

9. Corrective legislation on portal-to-portal pay.

10. Corrective labor laws in general.

I am very tired of the way labor unions have abused the special privilege they have enjoyed.

They are the changes some laborers want.

In the same mail today I received a letter from one of the big manufacturers in my district, who by the way, has been a good Jeffersonian Democrat. He writes me as follows:

The new Congress, a Republican Congress, is about to convene, and I am happy as an American to cast my vote of confidence for the work which it is about to undertake.

I note with considerable satisfaction that consideration of possible revision to the Wagner Act is high on the agenda, and I look to this Congress to create the balance between management and labor which is so long overdue. It is unthinkable that a law can long continue which permits one individual to attain such a position of power that he can defy his Government, bring the wheels of industry to a halt at a time when full production is so essential, throw hundreds of thousands of our producers out of work, and, generally, bring the greatest producing country in the world to a stand-still.

I, therefore, urge you most earnestly to support such legislation as will correct the above conditions, for it is my firm conviction that if such conditions are permitted to continue much longer the American way of life, of which we are so proud, must soon come to an end.

Very truly yours.

I realize that much can be said about this legislation. Proposed legislation will be presented to you as Members of the Congress, and I believe it behooves every one of us to give our very best attention to these matters so that we will not do anything to labor that is going to be a set-back. At the same time they must be responsible. Contracts must be kept by both employee and employer.

The closed shop should be outlawed. The portal-to-portal pay is a great farce made law by the courts, and it was not the intent of our founding fathers that anybody but the Congress should write the laws—certainly not the courts. This must be changed. We must think wisely, act judiciously, and be not afraid to do that which will benefit all—not minorities, but the country as a whole.

We must make labor just as accountable as we require management to be, because any law that is right and just will give every man his just dues. We want to do that which will aid and assist in building up our country. I do not want to tear down labor. I am an employer of labor. I want to help labor. I want to see that they are given the best working conditions possible; that they are given every advantage possible. I want to help them, because no man can run a business without labor. We are as inseparable as if we were to try to operate our plant without machines.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point some data from a booklet prepared by the manufacturers of this country, as well as an advertisement that was placed in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of Monday, December 16, by the Tool Owners Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. In concluding my remarks I want to place in the RECORD at this point an excerpt from a little booklet which came to my desk, Let's Build America. Industry's Recommendation to the Eightieth Congress; by the Congress of American Industry. I insert their summation with which I agree in the 10 points enumerated with the exception of point No. 7, a cut of 20 percent in taxes. If we knew that our income will be greater than our outgo I would agree with that point.

IN SUMMATION

Here are industry's recommendations of action that can be taken by the Eightieth Congress during 1947 to encourage sustained prosperity for America:

1. The special privileges now granted to strikers by our labor laws should be withheld when strikes are called or conducted improperly.

2. The Federal Government should not intervene in strikes beyond the point of providing conciliators.

3. Compulsory union membership should be forbidden by law.

4. Monopolistic wage conspiracies should be outlawed.

5. The budget should be balanced, and a start made on debt retirement.

6. Federal expenditures should be cut drastically—enough to permit—

7. A 1947 cut in personal income taxes of 20 percent and—

8. Reductions and reforms in business taxes for 1948.

9. A declaration of the end of hostilities should be made as soon as needed labor legislation has been enacted.

10. Remaining wartime controls and emergency powers should be terminated as rapidly and completely as possible.

Also I insert from an advertisement appearing in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of Monday, December 16, from the Tool Owners Union, their platform for progress in the revision of laws:

PLATFORM FOR PROGRESS

I. REVISION OF FEDERAL LABOR LAWS TO ASSURE GENUINE FREE BARGAINING

It is clear that American progress cannot be resumed until Federal laws dealing with labor unions have been changed. Tool Owners Union will petition Congress for these constructive changes; every citizen is invited to join TOU in that petition: (Use coupon below).

A. Freedom to work—no closed shop: All workers must be protected in their human right of free bargaining with the right at all times to choose between (a) bargaining individually without membership in a labor union and (b) bargaining collectively as a labor union member.

B. Equal responsibility—no special privilege for unions: Labor unions and business must be made equal before the law, equally responsible for failure to fulfill their contracts, and for violation of the law.

C. No fake bargaining by coercion: Means must be provided for business management and labor unions to freely and thoroughly bargain, and to assure that no lock-out, work interruption, or strike vote shall be undertaken until after genuine collective bargaining has failed.

D. No industry-wide monopoly: Bargaining must be at the plant level. No labor union should call a strike or work interruption until it is voted by a majority of eligible union members in the specific plant, mine, or facility affected. This assures the right of union members to control their leaders by referendum vote; it safeguards the right to strike and the right not to strike until the union members realize and consciously accept the full effect of the strike upon themselves, upon their fellow workers in other plants, and upon the general public.

These changes mean fair play; equality before the law and freedom of bargaining are as American as baked beans and baseball. Join with Tool Owners Union in petitioning Congress to make these changes now.

"You are a tool owner if you are 1 of 6,000,000 elderly, retired workers living on your savings; 1 of 13,000,000 women largely dependent on annuities and insurance; 1 of 16,000,000 farmers and small business and professional men; 1 of 41,000,000 ordinary life insurance owners; 1 of 45,000,000 savings bank depositors; 1 of 8,000,000 owners of corporate securities."

Not counting duplications there are 50,000,000 thrifty tool owners whose self-denial makes possible the tools that are the very foundation of our national strength and material welfare. If you are one of these and a citizen you are eligible to Tool Owners Union.

HON. JAMES F. BYRNES

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the whole country was shocked this morning when it learned that the Honorable James F. Byrnes had resigned as Secretary of State in President Truman's Cabinet. I know, too, that all patriotic Americans deeply regret that his health has necessitated this action on his part. Few, if any, men who have occupied that exalted position have ever been confronted with more harassing or momentous problems. It is, therefore, no wonder that even his stalwart constitution weakened under the tremendous strain that was his. The task assigned him of bringing order out of international chaos following the capitulation of the Axis Powers indeed approached the superhuman. But grateful Americans everywhere will always remember that it was the cool judgment, the resolute will, and the magnificent courage of Secretary Byrnes that resulted in the splendid progress that has been made in converting a dream of universal peace into an international parliament of nations to preserve that peace and cause the cessation of barbaric warfare among men.

This splendid South Carolinian can now well retire after years of outstanding service as a legislator, administrator, jurist, and exceptionally able statesman to enjoy the peace of his own body and mind that he so richly deserves. The prayers of the Christian people of the world will be his for a speedy physical recovery.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I asked the gentleman to yield in order that I might say I think, too, the country applauds the President for the wisdom he showed in selecting the best brain that came out of the last war to succeed Mr. Byrnes.

Mr. COLMER. With that statement of my distinguished colleague I have no argument. I think the President's selection was indeed a splendid one, as the successor to this great man who is now resigning from that office.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, the announcement of Secretary of State Byrnes' resignation, which came to us at nightfall yesterday, was not a surprise to those who were intimately acquainted with the distinguished Secretary. It has been more or less generally known for many months that Secretary Byrnes desired to be relieved from his multitudinous duties. By reason of the unprecedented tasks and tremendous responsibilities incumbent upon him through the long war years when he served as Director of Economic Stabilization and Director of War Mobilization, and then as the eminent spokesman of our Nation in the councils of a troubled and complicated postwar world, Secretary Byrnes had drawn too heavily upon his physical strength. It was inevitable that he must be relieved. To be sure, we are never quite ready to accept unpleasant announcements and had continued to hope that Secretary Byrnes would be able to carry on much longer.

There is little that I can say to the membership of this House concerning the life and character of one of its former members, then Representative Byrnes, who later became Senator Byrnes and still later Justice Byrnes. Seldom in our country's history has one of her sons possessed necessary outstanding qualifications to permit him to serve with such distinction in all three branches of the Government. This great South Carolinian overcame many difficulties and handicaps. It was his to be born in a proud but humble home. The father of Secretary Byrnes died before the birth of his distinguished son. The divine hand of Providence, however, gave the Secretary a saintly mother, endowed with more than the usual amount of wisdom and courage. By plying her needle, she was able to support not only her own son, but also her nephew, the Honorable Frank Hogan, who became the president of the American Bar.

Secretary Byrnes, or "Jimmy" as he is still affectionately called by his host of friends, never lost the common touch. He was able to move among the scholars and diplomats of the world and retain his personal knowledge and friendship with the toiling masses. Surely the example and life of such a one as Secretary Byrnes should be inspiring to the youth of the day. This is an example of where the son of the very poorest man may aspire to and ultimately attain the highest places in life.

While the retirement of Secretary Byrnes is to be regretted, we are exceedingly proud that the President, in his great wisdom, has chosen Gen. George C. Marshall to become Secretary of State. As evidence of General Marshall's greatness, although he was not a graduate of West Point, he became Chief of Staff, an accomplishment seldom attained. General Marshall was advanced by President Roosevelt over a number of higher-ranking officers, by reason of his outstanding qualifications. I have been told that General Marshall, while a student at Virginia Military Institute, studied and sought to emulate our own great southern general, Thomas Jonathan Jackson, recognized as one of the greatest military strategists of all time.

We shall miss Secretary Byrnes. Let us hope that by returning to his native State he may regain needed physical strength to carry on for many years to come. I am proud that he is a resident of my congressional district.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF NEW ORLEANS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as one man who served with Jim Byrnes in this House for many years, I join in the tributes that have been paid him. I am also delighted that he is succeeded by General Marshall.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that today is one of the most important anniversaries in the history of America. One hundred and thirty-two years ago today Andrew Jackson, with his invincible band of volunteers, met the British Army at New Orleans and, as Sergeant S. Prentiss, a former Member of this House, has said, he taught the newly fledged American eagle to match its talons with the lion's strength, and raised America for the first time to the dignity of a world power.

We must maintain for our country her rightful position of leadership among the nations of the earth, if our civilization is to endure.

I am tired of seeing my country undermined at home and insulted abroad; and I believe if there is one man under the American flag who will call the hand of that element so dealing with the United States it is Gen. George C. Marshall.

For that reason I am delighted that he has been appointed to this exalted position. I am sure he will follow the advice of George Washington and "Put only Americans on guard."

THE YOUTH OF AMERICA

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, one of the most challenging speeches ever made on the floor of this House was that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] a few moments ago. In my opinion, it would be a salutary and wholesome thing if the President of the United States would now call a national health conference here in Washington to begin a real war on the bugs that have beset not only the youth of America but all mankind.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

GEN. GEORGE C. MARSHALL

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time for the purpose of complimenting the President of the United States upon his appointment of Gen. George C. Marshall as Secretary of State. I deeply regret the necessity of the resignation of James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, from this position in the Cabinet. He has done a magnificent job in handling the foreign affairs of this Nation and, no doubt, when history sums up the events of his life in future years it will give a foremost place in this summary to his genius which has contributed so much in the last few years in constructing events for permanent world peace.

In the tragic events leading up to the recent world war and during the long and tortuous years of this war, it was my privilege and high honor to work with Gen. George Marshall, who served as Chief of Staff of our armies. As a member of the Military Affairs Committee, I know of his transcendent ability as an organizer and his brilliance as a leader. General Marshall has the complete confidence of the peoples of the nations of the earth. What is more important, in my mind, is that he has the complete confidence of the people of the United States.

In handling the new task which has been assigned to him, General Marshall carries with him his genius as an organizer and a vast storehouse of experience in world affairs. No Member of Congress who has known and worked with General Marshall will doubt his sincerity of effort, his tenacity of purpose in the face of obstacles, and his devotion to his country. The President is certainly to be commended upon his fine judgment in selecting General Marshall.

JUSTICE FOR OUR TEACHERS

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I read in the public press yesterday where the chairman-designate of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], has indicated that we can very well get along with approximately a million fewer Federal employees. I believe that we can get along with a smaller number of Federal employees. Whether it is a million, a half-million, or a quarter of a million, I do not know. I trust, however, that the Congress will proceed in an orderly way to determine just where money can be saved and how we can get along with fewer employees. I also trust that when we cut people off the Federal pay roll those who remain will be paid well for their services. I believe in paying public employees well for doing a good job.

A class of citizens, public employees, underpaid throughout the land, are the people in the teaching profession. It is understandable that on occasion some of these people in the teaching profession look longingly toward Moscow and elsewhere when they are paid as niggardly salaries as they are everywhere in educational institutions, both in our public schools and institutions of higher learning. I do not know just how we here in the Congress can best approach the subject. I do not believe in the Federal Government having too much to do with our educational systems. I know our State legislatures are now in session. I trust that our legislatures will immediately proceed to raise teachers' salaries. There is a shortage of qualified teachers now, but the real hurt is going to last a long time because there are only 50 percent as many persons in teacher-training colleges now as before the war. During the war a large number of teachers sought more lucrative jobs and will never return.

We are neglecting the people in the teaching profession, and, if there is no other way out, if after the legislatures meet during the next 60 or 90 days and fail to take the action that is necessary, I trust that the Congress will make some effort to augment or to provide funds in those places where funds are not available so that our teachers might be well paid. Summarizing my remarks briefly, let us put it this way: For years, Government officials on every level of authority have persistently ignored the plight of our Nation's school teachers. They have been compelled to maintain themselves and their families on substandard salary scales on the theory that their calling in some mysterious way offered compensation in public respect and prestige adequate to their needs. Today hundreds of thousands are leaving the teaching profession. Too few new teachers in training are being attracted to fill the gaps. It is time for the lawmakers and fund disbursers of the country to recognize that praise and platitudes are not substitutes for food, clothing, and shelter. It is time for recognition of the fact that school teachers in our Republic must have good incomes to assure good teaching; that they must be honored through the public purse no less than from the public forum. We have constantly proclaimed the dependence of our Nation's future on the quality of instruction imparted to the citizens of tomorrow. We must act today if we are to make certain that the instruction offered meets the stringent tests of adequate preparation of our children to live in an atomic world.

THE RESIGNATION OF THE HONORABLE JAMES F. BYRNES

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, it was with real regret that I heard the news of the resignation of our able and faithful Secretary of State, the Honorable James F. Byrnes. During the period in which he was in charge of our foreign relations, he has had to contend with some of the most difficult problems that this Nation has ever been confronted with. He has performed his many tasks in an outstanding manner, and the people of the United States are to be congratulated upon the fact that they had such a man as Jimmy Byrnes representing them in our postwar negotiations with other nations throughout the world.

It is to be sincerely hoped that his firm and just policy will be continued and the strides made under his leadership will be carried forward in the activities of his successor, the Honorable George C. Marshall. The President is to be commended for his appointment of General Marshall as our new Secretary of State. General Marshall is to be commended for the fine job he has performed in China and his understanding of the situation in that strife-torn country. For the past 13 months, as the President's special ambassador to China, he has exerted all his efforts to bring about a sound understanding between the various factions in that country to the end that China might become united and in so doing be able to resume the place which had been prepared for her among the great nations of the world. That he was unsuccessful was due not to lack of striving on General Marshall's part but rather to a lack of understanding between the leaders of the Communist Party in China and certain elements within the Kuomintang itself. This was brought out quite clearly in the personal statement issued by General Marshall, and I believe that this frank exposition of facts, as he saw them, should serve as a guide to the American people in bettering their understanding about the complicated situation in China. General Marshall will bring to his new position a sound knowledge of diplomacy based on his experience as Chief of Staff during the war years and also on his most recent mission to the Far East.

I know that as always he will do the best possible job he can; that we will be well and capably represented in our negotiations with all foreign countries; and that he will carry on in the tradition of his predecessor, Jimmy Byrnes, to the end that a just and permanent peace will be made and that a new era of friendship will take place among all the nations of the world.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include excerpts and statements in each.

EXPENDITURES FOR EDUCATION

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the judgment of our Congressman at Large, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], in regard to education. It is well known, and leading papers of the country have directed our attention to the fact, that $3 in this country are spent on cosmetics to every $1 that is spent on education. I think this is a situation that needs correction, and I am most happy that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has brought this matter to our attention. I trust this Congress will take the lead in giving all possible assistance to education. Thereby we will not only be doing our duty to our young people, but we will be insuring the continuance of our democratic form of government, which, we know, depends upon a well-informed citizenry.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CLEMENTS, for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thy mercy need not be graven in stone, for it has been stamped forever on the wanderings of man. It has transcended time and space and embraces a multitude without number. Breath of our breathing, light of our gladness, be with us in our aims, our ambitions, and our dearest affections. Pardon us if we are miserly, forgive us if we are filled with pride, and spare us from becoming victims of an evil temper. Thou who canst bind up the hurt hearts and inspire with bright hopes those who are tossed on the maddened waves of life, be Thou our way, our beacon, and our rescue, for Thy goodness we never seek in vain. Lead us above the level of our own poor understanding into the paths where God's hand is upon us; then we shall know of the newer, richer, and deeper meaning of life. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter dealing with the subject of flaxseed and linseed oil.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, as you know, I come from Chicago, one of the great retail and wholesale centers of the United States. I desire to invite the attention of the House of Representatives to a situation which is developing as the result of the declaration of the termination of hostilities by the President of the United States. I refer to the extension of the Federal retail excise tax. The continuance of this full tax until July 1, 1947, will affect the retail trade adversely and relief should be granted. Because of the knowledge that this tax is to be lifted there will be a tendency on the part of a large number of people to hold off in making purchases if it operates to the extent which is contemplated. This will create a serious condition, not only in Chicago but in the other large retail centers of the country. A great number of people may be thrown out of employment and an injustice will be operating against a large number of establishments. I wish to bring to the attention of the House a few communications on this subject which I received and which I intend to send to the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

I submit a letter from one of the large retail department stores in Chicago, which I hope will receive proper consideration:

MANDEL BROS.,
Chicago, Ill., January 6, 1947.

Hon. ROBERT J. TWYMAN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman TWYMAN: As president of a corporation engaged in operating a large department store and consequently selling merchandise subject to the Federal retail excise tax, I should like to call your attention to the already patent inequities occasioned by the recent announcement of a reduction in the tax rate.

It is my opinion, and that of many others with whom I have discussed the matter, that unless the proposed reduction in rate is effected immediately, both manufacturer and retailer will sustain a serious loss of business during the first half of this year. The customer is also penalized; one who has a definite and immediate need for such merchandise is forced to pay the current tax, while one who can afford to wait is benefited by the reduced tax. There are other reasons sustaining this opinion with which I will not burden you but which must appear obvious.

Your serious consideration of this problem, and early action to remove this inequitable situation, is respectfully urged.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LEON MANDEL,
President, Mandel Bros., Inc.

I also quote the following paragraph from a letter from another Chicago company:

Therefore, we respectfully urge you to use your influence in relation to the House Ways and Means Committee and the corresponding Senate committee to begin as quickly as possible procedure to reduce the above-mentioned 20 percent taxes to 10 percent instead of waiting until July 1.

The foregoing paragraph contains the views of the Illinois Federation of Retail Associations. The full retention of the 20-percent Federal excise tax until July 1 will affect people in every walk of life.

(Mr. TWYMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include therein a letter and a paragraph of another letter.)

THE LATE HONORABLE JOHN W. BOEHNE, SR.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House the death of the late Honorable John W. Boehne, Sr., who represented the old First District of the State of Indiana, now known as the Eighth District, which I have the honor to represent. Mr. Boehne served in the House of Representatives with distinction in the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Congresses during the administration of President Taft. I am sure my colleagues join me in revering the memory of Mr. Boehne, who died December 27, 1946, at the age of 90, and in extending sympathy to his family.

MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 43), which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations and the subcommittees thereof be authorized to sit during sessions and recesses of the Eightieth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAR TAX RATES ON CERTAIN MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, on January 6 I introduced H. R. 467, to terminate certain wartime excise-tax rates. Since that date I have learned through the medium of the Associated Press and the United Press that the genial gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], who is chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has expressed himself in accord with my bill. Similar sentiments were expressed by several other gentlemen on that high committee of the House.

It is splendid to know that the gentleman from Minnesota who is so well versed in the tax structure of our country and who has the best interests of the country and its people at heart is so strongly in favor of my bill. I never doubted that the promises that the gentleman made that he would see to it that taxes were reduced would not be kept. I welcome his assistance, and I shall be very happy when he notifies me that he will give me a speedy hearing on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 44), which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Ways and Means: Robert L. Doughton, North Carolina; Jere Cooper, Tennessee; John D. Dingell, Michigan; Milton H. West, Texas; Wilbur D. Mills, Arkansas; Noble J. Gregory, Kentucky; A. Sidney Camp, Georgia; Walter A. Lynch, New York; Aime J. Forand, Rhode Island; Herman P. Eberharter, Pennsylvania.

Rules: Adolph J. Sabath, Illinois; E. E. Cox, Georgia; Howard W. Smith, Virginia; J. Bayard Clark, North Carolina.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE SUGAR SITUATION

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, according to yesterday's newspapers, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson, speaking on sugar at Chicago, said:

We are already getting a large share of the world's supplies.

Only two other countries, the United Kingdom and Canada, have as much sugar per capita as we have. Most countries have a great deal less sugar, less of other sweetening, and less of other food as well.

Remember that our country, as an important member of the International Emergency Food Council, was allowed to buy the whole crop of Cuban sugar at a fair price without other countries bidding against us.

The Cuban crop represents a major portion of the world's sugar available for export.

The countries that trusted us to act as sole buyer have a right to expect that the crop will be handled as a pool which they can share, as they did in the war years.

Our integrity is at stake.

This brings to mind the controversy of last October when Howard R. Tolley, formerly of the United States Department of Agriculture, now Director of the Division of Economics and Statistics of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, announced a program for sharing our sugar supply with other nations for years to come. It was not advanced as a famine-relief program, but as a plan to raise the normal consumption of sugar in other countries at the expense and through the sacrifice of the people of the United States.

Specifically, Tolley proposed that by the year 1950 the total American supply of sugar and syrup should be depressed by 12.6 percent under the total prewar consumption. And this despite the fact that our population in 1950 is expected to be 13,500,000 more than in 1940.

The Tolley plan will keep us on the wartime basis of sugar scarcity for years after the peace. At that time, in October, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson flatly denied that Mr. Tolley's plan represented the views of the Department of Agriculture. Has Secretary Anderson changed his mind? Or was the announcement of the Tolley plan made in the famous New Deal technique of announcing a certain program as a trial balloon and immediately publicly repudiating it to assuage the blow, while it was secretly being put in operation?

The American people have no objection to sharing a portion of the sugar from their accustomed areas of supply with nations in desperate need. But the housewives should not be obliged to forego their needed supply of sugar for the carrying out of the plans of the international "do-gooders" under the Tolley program; nor should such a plan be carried out with secrecy against the interest of the American sugar users.

It is now well known that the administration sugar control agencies deliberately sabotaged production of sugar during the years 1943, 1944, and 1945 to perpetuate their control through the resulting scarcity. They should not be permitted to further perpetuate their power by deliberate maldistribution while production in our supply areas is finally catching up with consumption.

Nor should the American housewife be cheated out of her sugar by false propaganda creating unwarranted sympathy for the European housewife. According to reliable statistics, while the consumption per capita in the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada is 78.1 pounds, there are some countries in Europe with per capita consumption as high as 89.6 pounds and 84.4 pounds. Moreover, in the United States two thirds of the per capita consumption, or 53.1 pounds, is absorbed by commercial users. In European countries commercial consumption is negligible. So that in such countries as Switzerland with 60.6 pounds per capita, Holland with 53.1 pounds per capita, Czechoslovakia with 63.7 pounds per capita, and so forth, the bulk of the sugar goes to the housewives instead of only one-third of it, as in the United States.

This explains why people returning from Europe report abundance of sugar for household purposes in those countries. The American housewife is left holding the bag while European housewives get the sugar. It is high time that this misplaced sympathy racket be exposed.

Congress should make an immediate investigation of sugar production and distribution maladministration, and secure a fair deal for the American housewife.

THE LATE HONORABLE CHARLES M. BORCHERS

Mr. McMILLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCMILLEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce the death of Charles M. Borchers at Decatur, Ill., late in December 1946. He represented the Nineteenth Congressional District of Illinois in the Sixty-third Congress. He was twice mayor of Decatur, where he practiced law for 50 years. His rugged honesty and ability was a credit to the bar, and his constant response to civic duty is a lasting contribution to his community and country.

STOCKHOLDERS FREQUENTLY OUTNUMBER EMPLOYEES

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, there have been many deliberate attempts, both on this floor and elsewhere, to picture our great industrial enterprises as soulless, bodiless, voteless "nebulisms."

The truth is, of course, that these corporations are the cooperative instrumentality of flesh-and-blood citizens who, as the owning stockholders, frequently outnumber the employees.

From the list of our 50 largest manufacturing corporations, I am appending the names of a dozen in which number of stockholders exceed number of employees—in one case by more than 5 to 1.

	Stockholders	Employees
General Electric Co	234,732	167,212
American Tobacco Co	74,039	10,740
Republic Steel Co	62,912	59,712
International Paper Co	26,800	22,677
R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co	61,000	15,000
American Can Co	34,000	23,400
National Dairy Products Corp	66,636	36,698
Radio Corp. of America	228,502	38,435
American Car & Foundry Co	14,437	7,495
Borden Co	49,174	27,258
American Rolling Mill Co	42,872	21,957

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on Monday, January 13, after the conclusion of the legislative business of the day, on the subject of legislation relating to lifting the ceilings on the job-training program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix in two instances and in each to include excerpts.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was granted permission to extend my remarks and include an address by Dr. Wilson Compton, President of Washington State College. I am advised by the Public Printer that it exceeds the limitation set under rule 10; that it will take 2⅓ pages and cost $140. Notwithstanding this, I ask consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost, without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement on rice.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a copy of a bill.

Mr. KIRWAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a memorandum on sugar.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

FEDERAL BUREAUCRATIC ENCROACHMENT OF ST. LOUIS AIRPORT

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, the story I have to tell today is one of arrogance and official usurpation against the interest of the people. It is the story of bureaucratic officiousness running rampant. It is the case of a Government corporation in particular, and other departments and bureaus, abusing the interest and privileges of the people of the State of Missouri and the city of St. Louis. These acts, which I am about to relate, threaten to destroy the logical and great air center of St. Louis because of the abuse of wartime privileges extended by the city to the Federal Government. Patriotism in this case has been repaid by usurpation.

The city of St. Louis with only the purpose of winning the war in mind—and without thought of compensation either then or in the future—gave, loaned, and leased for the emergency, large areas of its airport property to various branches of the armed forces. The development of these areas, and the use of the airport, have not only worked a great hardship and expense upon the city of St. Louis, but have made it necessary for the city to alter its airport plans in such a way that it became necessary for the citizens to vote an additional fund of $14,397,000 for this development. The operation of these federally held properties have encroached upon the airport and threatened its very existence. Even though the war is over, the Federal Government, through its various agencies, shows either a reluctance or refusal to return or release these properties. As a result, the city of St. Louis, which holds the promise of one of the world's greatest air centers, is now so badly handicapped it cannot move forward. Until the activities of the Federal Government can be removed from its airport, the airport ownership and operation cannot be successful. The extension of wartime controls, which have now become usurpation, are working viciously against the commercial operation and expansion.

The agencies to which I refer are the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in particular, War Assets Administration, and the Army and Navy. These Government authorities used the only commercial airport belonging to the city of St. Louis. They added their own special facilities, and after the close of war activities, reversing the Federal policy elsewhere, they have retained their hold on the city's commercial facilities under their war leases.

The city is now confronted with the lack of control of its own airport. A brief description begins with the so-called Curtiss-Wright plant. It stands on leased ground of the St. Louis Airport, and together with the associated area of activity around the plant, completely dominates the entire north side of our airport.

The naval training station, together with its associated area of activity, usurps the southern sector of our air field. An Army lease of hangar and area, which was leased for $1 a year, takes over the activities of the entire southern half of the western side of our airport. The Lambert-St. Louis Airport is literally squeezed in between these activities and cannot expand without a tremendous outlay of money.

Now, if St. Louis is to gain its proper place as one of the major airports of the world, it must have required facilities such as hangars, repair shops, and so forth, now occupied by Army and Navy, as well as the high bay area of the Curtiss-Wright plant. Airplanes must be housed and the big commercial planes of today served. The minute these facilities are available, St. Louis becomes the originating and terminating point of transcontinental flights. This program is now delayed by Federal bureaucracy.

The city is ready to spend and expand and to build, but it is dangerous to do so without the definite assurance that it will have use and control of its own airport.

Various city officials, citizens, and I, have spent months in an attempt to arrive at an equitable solution with the Government. The dilatory, and in some cases, arrogant tactics, which have been used to counter every activity on the part of the city, amount to a national scandal.

Mr. Speaker, I have been on this Federal "merry-go-round" before and it is not a new experience—but it is a bitter one. Over the years, we have allowed bureaucracy to grow so arrogant that it threatens the very existence of community activity and authority.

In 1940, the city of St. Louis leased 48.8 acres on the St. Louis-Lambert Airport to the Curtiss-Wright Corp., with the understanding that the Defense Plant Corporation would finance a plant thereon in which airplanes would be manufactured for the United States Army.

The city made no attempt to get a fair rental, but leased this ground for a nominal amount. They also gave the free use of the airfield, and this use included the testing of airplanes used in the plant. The city required very few restrictions, but it did include in the lease a provision that if anything other than airplanes or airplane parts were manufactured that the right to use the airfield would be canceled.

The city also included in the lease a proviso that in the event the Government wished to install a tenant, which was not a department of the Government, that the city should have the veto power and control of such tenancy. We did not know at that time, and we do not know now, any other way to control our airport, unless we have control of this all-important site.

The RFC, which now holds title to this plant for the United States Navy, has not only moved a tenant into the property illegally and virtually rent free, but also boastfully repudiates the city's legal rights. That is just one part of the case of the city of St. Louis against the usurpation by the Federal Government.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLOESER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to confirm what the gentleman has to say about the cluttering up of the St. Louis airport by these Government buildings. I think it was in 1942 that the Select Committee to Investigate Air Accidents was called upon to go to St. Louis to investigate an accident that almost resulted in death on account of the construction of this Curtiss-Wright plant on the land occupied by the airport and set up off the land. The runways are in some measure surrounded by buildings. It is a dangerous situation, and I believe for the safety of the people flying in and out of St. Louis certainly these buildings directly on the airport proper might well be removed. Certainly, if the Government has them there, they might well take those steps.

Mr. PLOESER. I appreciate what my distinguished colleague from California has said, and I know that he is thoroughly informed because of his great work on that special committee. They investigated these air accidents a few years ago. I want to say that the situation has caused us to turn our entire airport plans around and require, many, many more acres of ground.

In 1941, the city transferred to the Navy Department a piece of ground on this airport site, opposite the Curtiss-Wright site, amounting to 21.5 acres. For this, the city received a token payment of only $50. The commercial value of this lease, on an earning basis of its prominence and importance to the airport, would easily be the valuation of $1,000,000. The purpose of this concession to the Navy was to enable the Navy to build and operate a naval air-training station, and then in addition the city graciously allowed the Navy the free and unrestricted use of the city's then existing airfield for the training of Navy pilots.

In 1942, the city leased the southwest corner of the airport—a tract of 8.4 acres—to the Army for a rental of $1 a year. There is a big city hangar on this site, which was used by the Army for the repairing and housing of planes, and as a depot for ATC planes. The Army encroached upon the airfield proper for at least double the rented area for all the various Air Forces functions, including testing and installation of bomber turrets.

The city of St. Louis made other arrangements of this type in cooperating with the war effort. For example, they leased the enclosed roof of the terminal building to the Army at a rental of 20 cents per year. In all its dealings with the Federal Government, the city was motivated only by the desire to contribute to the country's defense, without thought of profit or even compensation. The city turned over large strategic areas of its airport to the Federal Government.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLOESER. I yield to my distinguished colleague from St. Louis, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN].

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. The question of facilities at the Lambert-St. Louis Airport is a nonpartisan matter. I am just as interested in this matter as my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER].

At the present time St. Louis has only one major airport and unless something is done to alleviate the situation that exists there the city will likely lose its place in the fast-moving development of aviation.

The city of St. Louis as a patriotic gesture, during the period of the war, turned three large areas of the airport over to the Government. Now that the war is over the city is justified in asking for the return of its airport facilities. The field is now practically surrounded by military and naval activity.

A survey of the whole situation was made recently by the Municipal Airport Commission. It submitted a report which outlines in detail the situation that exists at the field. A copy of the report reached me a few days ago and I am in accord with the general objectives it seeks to accomplish.

I am anxious to see the situation at Lambert Field corrected and also am anxious to protect the interests of the people of St. Louis. I am going to cooperate with the gentleman in his efforts to straighten the matter out.

Mr. PLOESER. I appreciate the gentleman's assistance, and he has been of assistance.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. The St. Louis newspapers are unanimous in their support of this movement. I would request that the gentleman ask permission to include at the conclusion of his remarks editorials from these newspapers.

Mr. PLOESER. May I say to the gentleman I appreciate what he has said and I do now ask unanimous consent that the editorials, which are now in the possession of my distinguished colleague from St. Louis the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], be extended at the conclusion of my remarks following the report of the airport commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURTIS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, the fact that 90.2 percent of the total number of commercial and military operations of the air field, from April 1, 1941, to November 1, 1946, were operations by military aircraft, is evidence of the city's all-out effort to be of assistance. In addition to the concessions, losses to the city's out-of-pocket maintenance expense, for the benefit of these Federal agencies, for 5 years, was $250,000 per year.

When I recall that many cities of the Nation were asked for facilities on their commercial airports, and the Army and Navy were told by them to go build their own airports, I feel ashamed that any department of the Federal Government should be guilty of the abuse now being handed out to St. Louis. I cannot help but recall that the Federal Government bought Floyd Bennett Field for New York for a reported $9,500,000 and added more than $6,000,000 dollars in improvements. After the war was over, the Government gave it back to the city of New York. I also cannot help but remember the Thunderbird Field in Arizona, where the Federal Government built and paid for an airport, and gave it to a private corporation after the war. Coming even closer home to St. Louis, I cannot help but recall that Douglas Field, 1,000 acres, bought and paid for by the Federal Government, was an outright gift to the city of Chicago.

Now, the city of St. Louis wants to own, maintain, and operate its own commercial airport, and to do this it must have these properties returned. It must remove the military operations from the field.

We have attempted, by the exercise of the utmost patience, to bring about amicable adjustment of these matters with the Army, Navy, WAA and with the RFC. Numerous meetings have been held in Washington and in St. Louis, consuming countless hours of city and Federal officials—and my time—attempting to bring about a solution without injury. While the Navy has shown a willingness to be on the job, and I cannot question that, there has been a reluctance on the part of the Navy to fully comprehend the injury to the city of St. Louis. So, they stand today in the position of one usurping the city's property. But, even where the Navy was willing to function to bring about results, we were always blocked by the total lack of responsibility of any statement from RFC. On several occasions, we thought that we had agreement, only to find that the very propositions made by RFC were to be denied, repudiated, and retracted within hours after their promises. We have been pushed from one agency to another on the vicious Washington "merry-go-round."

The Navy claims that they cannot complete action without the RFC; the RFC passes the buck back to the Navy. There have been conferences in which the very integrity of the city officials in St. Louis has been insulted.

The Army has now declared surplus their tract and their $1 a year lease, which they claim is valuable, and the WAA has it for sale.

Military use of the airport continues at the expense of the city of St. Louis, all because of the citiy's honest and patriotic effort to serve during wartime. We cannot justify such shabby treatment now. The arrogance of the RFC, the vacillation of the WAA, and the reluctance of the Navy to comprehend, added to the unreasonableness of the War Department's position, makes a sorry picture which is hindering air commerce and threatening the very air life of the city.

Now, we do not intend to go on and tolerate such actions. The city intends to fight with every weapon, and I intend to give my aid—within my power—to remove the military and bureaucratic domination. In respect to the 20-cent-a-year lease of the Army's enclosed top of the city's administration building, we are told, by the Army, that it has been transferred to CAA. Now that the emergency is over, it should rightfully be returned to the city.

We have an air-transportation crisis, and it has been created by the Federal bureaucracy. Now we propose to bring that bureaucracy into accounting and defeat its dilatory actions and regain our rightful property.

We have not asked for any gifts such as have been enjoyed by other municipal beneficiaries, but we have asked—and we do demand—the return of that which is rightfully due the city of St. Louis.

On Tuesday, January 7, I transmitted a letter to the President of the United States, which I ask to have embodied at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1947.

MR. HARRY S. TRUMAN,
The President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It had been hoped that it would not be necessary to bring to your personal attention the difficult airport problem facing the city of St. Louis. In cooperation with members of the St. Louis Airport Commission; the present mayor, Hon. A. P. Kaufmann; and the former mayor and present postmaster, Hon. Bernard Dickman, I have attempted to bring about cooperation—and by cooperation—solution of the immediate St. Louis airport problems.

Due to useless delay brought about by deliberate procrastination and vacillation upon the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the War Assets Administration; and due to stubborn usurpation on the part of the Navy Department; and a ridiculous and unfair assumption of property rights on the part of the War Department, I am compelled to lay the case before you personally.

The report attached will shock your sense of justice, as it does mine.

Mr. President, action—immediate action—is so very important or else your State and mine suffers a continued injury, which cannot be anything but shameful in the eyes of all citizens of all States.

This report was made public in St. Louis today, and I propose to tell the House of Representatives, and from this moment on to use whatever means at my command to break these chains of bureaucratic arrogance and abuse.

It is within your power to direct that justice be done in this situation. For months we have tried reason, without success. Now, the city of St. Louis has the power of public opinion, which is sure to follow full exposure; or, legal action, which is likely to work injury to the Naval Establishment.

Your immediate action would be greatly valued.

Respectfully and with personal regard, I am

Sincerely yours.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, with this letter I enclosed a copy of the St. Louis Airport Commission's report entitled "The Crisis Created by Continuing Federal War Controls at Lambert-St. Louis Airport." This report reveals the amazing procedure, which all of us have been compelled to endure for the past months. As I told the President, it will shock the sense of justice of any person who reads it. Denials we can expect, but, likewise, full exposure of the circumstances can be expected.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope it will not be necessary for me to ask for a full-dress investigation by this House of these activities. I do propose to use every means at my command to bring about immediate settlement of the city's equities. The city of St. Louis has been injured to the extent of $6,500,000 by these Federal agencies and, what is worse, it cannot proceed until they are eliminated from the airport.

Curiously enough, this money spent by the city in behalf of the Federal Government was not created by some mysterious Washington economic Houdini. It was hard cash paid by the taxpayers of St. Louis, and every day St. Louis fails to complete its necessary airport facilities additional tax penalties are being saddled upon the taxpayers of St. Louis by the Federal bureaucracies.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLOESER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Representing the Eleventh Missouri Congressional District, which takes in a great part of the city of St. Louis, I wish to go on record as concurring in the position taken by my colleague from the adjoining district, the Twelfth Missouri Congressional District. I have read the recent report of the Municipal Airport Commission and cannot help but come to the conclusion that the development of air facilities and air activities at Lambert Field has been very seriously retarded and impeded by what I would call the vacillation, indecision, and cross purposes of representatives of various bureaus of the Federal Government. Not only has it retarded commercial activities of the St. Louis Airport but by reason of what I might call the disintegrated system of both commercial and military flying at this field, there definitely exists a serious hazard to both life and property. I therefore concur in the position of my colleague and hope and trust that the duly authorized representatives of the War Assets Administration, the RFC, and the Army and Navy promptly get together to find a solution to this problem in order that the city of St. Louis can proceed with its postwar air development without being subject to the whims and fancies of a few individuals in the Federal Government.

Mr. PLOESER. I appreciate what my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BAKEWELL] has said, and what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN] has said. I want this House to know, and the bureaus to know, that the three of us are together in this fight to the finish.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLOESER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I understood the gentleman to say that the Army has declared as surplus the airfields and they are now turned over to the War Assets Administration?

Mr. PLOESER. We gave them this area of eight and a fraction acres, plus the hangars, for their use during the war, for a dollar a year. So now they are putting it on sale in the War Assets Administration, instead of giving it back to us directly.

Mr. RICH. They can make a grant to the city of St. Louis, if they so choose?

Mr. PLOESER. Yes, but you are probably familiar with the War Assets Administration. It is a very difficult thing to get them to do anything.

Mr. RICH. I know it is. You cannot tell anything about what they are doing. Let me ask the gentleman this question: If the authorities of St. Louis make a request from it, they can get that property, and they ought to turn it over to them, and the quicker they do it the better.

Mr. PLOESER. It is my understanding that on the last request they were told that this is a very valuable property—this dollar-a-year lease—and so they were going to sell it. Of course, we have a priority on the purchase of it, but we do not like the idea of buying back our own property.

Mr. RICH. What are the improvements on the property?

Mr. PLOESER. There are hangars and repair shops which St. Louis built.

Mr. RICH. How long was that lease to be in operation? During the war?

Mr. PLOESER. I think it has a few years to run.

Mr. RICH. During the war emergency?

Mr. PLOESER. When they came in they asked us for a lease, which they wrote, and we gave them anything they asked for, in order to get on with the war. Now, they used 90.2 percent of the field over all these years, and we paid for the maintenance for their services.

Mr. RICH. I am not interested in giving anything more to St. Louis than to any other city, but I think you people should make your application to them and see that you get treated right and that the city gets that back. If it is worth something to the city of St. Louis they should pay something to the United States Government for what it is worth.

Mr. PLOESER. The property belongs to the city of St. Louis. This I have said repeatedly. Furthermore, we do not propose paying the Federal Government for our own property.

Mr. RICH. What about the airport which the Navy owns? Why do they need that out there?

Mr. PLOESER. The Navy does not own an airport at this location.

Mr. RICH. Then they should get rid of it, because the Army and Navy are holding on to too many things that are costing the Government a lot of money and that are not necessary. The sooner we let the Army and Navy know that they should economize in the operation of those two branches, the better off the Government will be and the better off the Army and Navy will be, and we should see that they do that.

Mr. PLOESER. I thank the gentleman.

The charges made by the St. Louis Airport report are thoroughly documented, and I ask unanimous consent to have the report extended in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER]?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

THE CRISIS CREATED BY CONTINUING FEDERAL WAR CONTROLS AT LAMBERT-ST. LOUIS AIRPORT

I. DESCRIPTION OF CITY'S AIRPORT CRISIS

The city's plight

The city of St. Louis through its authorized officials presents the following account as to its airport situation.

The story of St. Louis' airport problems is the case of a city which, with only the purpose of winning the war and without a thought of compensation, either present or future, gave, loaned, and leased for the emergency, large areas of its airport property to the various branches of the armed forces. Now, as a result of the city's efforts, it finds itself facing the ruination of its airport and air transportation program because these various agencies of the Federal Government, even though the war is over, refuse to release these various properties, and wish to control these properties with all the rights and privileges accorded them in wartime and thereby control not only the present airport but the city's ultimate airport.

Federal agencies on city's airport

The situation at Lambert-St. Louis Airport presents a unique set of circumstances completely unprecedented throughout the country. Instead of building new airports at St. Louis or expanding old ones for the crucial war activities, as was done everywhere else, our Government used the only commercial airport belonging to the city of St. Louis, adding their own special facilities and after the close of war activities, reversing the Federal policy elsewhere, retained their hold on the city's commercial facilities under the war leases. Although the city of St. Louis has devoted much thought, effort, and planning to the development of this airport and has expended large sums of bond-issue money thereon for the purpose of providing main trunk air-line facilities for the citizens of St. Louis and environs.

Although the citizens of St. Louis have voted an additional $14,397,000, an amount entirely adequate for major airport facilities for the largest air transports, nevertheless the city, through no fault of its own, now finds itself seriously handicapped by reason of the necessity for excessive expenditures to remedy circumstances forced on it by Federal occupancy of the field in the past 5 years under war conditions.

A brief visual survey of the exact situation speaks for itself. Exhibit A discloses the area of Federal activity during the past 5 years and its effect on the airport.

Federal installations overwhelm airport

It is obvious that the Curtiss-Wright plant, together with its associated area of activity, completely dominates the whole north side of the field.

It is also apparent that the Navy training station, together with its associated area of activity, usurps the major portion of the southern sector of the field.

On the west the Army, through $1-a-year leases, has taken over and occupied the entire southern half of the west end of the airport, including paved areas owned and needed by the city.

Not only have these most valuable areas been removed from utilization by the city but a glance at the exhibit indicates that also the remaining choice areas on the original field are literally "squeezed" in between these Federal activities and irretrievably preempted from being used as alternate locations in the future development of the field. Only by tripling the size of the field to the east and by greatly increased outlay has satisfactory location been made of runways, taxiways, and terminal facilities, which under the original plans could have been so advantageously fitted into the original area.

Lambert Field only possible site

By far the greatest damage to the city of St. Louis as a result of the location of the Curtiss-Wright building on its present site is the fact that this building introduces hazards to, and usurps a portion of, Lambert Field, which field is absolutely irreplaceable and is the sole locality in which a major airport can now be developed by the city of St. Louis.

The city of St. Louis is in the unique situation of being completely surrounded by St. Louis County, yet being no part of the county. Citizens of St. Louis pay no county taxes, do not vote in the county, nor do they have any voice in county affairs.

The city derives its power to acquire land for airport purposes by virtue of a State statute which contains the proviso that "no airport or landing field shall be established or located in any county, city, or city under special charter in violation of any plan or master airport plan or zoning regulation restricting the location of any airport or landing field adopted by the planning commission of any county, city, or city under special charter." St. Louis County has a planning and zoning commission, which commission has adopted a master airport plan, and that plan assigns only two sites as being available for the construction of major airports, namely, Lambert Field and Columbia bottoms sites. In the past the city has made special application to the planning commission for approval of another site, but was denied such permission after extensive negotiations and hearings.

Columbia bottoms 6 to 10 years away

The city is now acquiring the Columbia bottoms site, but this project is some 6 to 10 years in the future, because of delays attendant upon condemnation procedure and because of the engineering difficulties in protecting the property against floods of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers. Therefore, it is self-evident that for the present and for some time to come Lambert Field is, in fact, the only site available to the city of St. Louis for a major airport.

St. Louis' position in jeopardy

The city of St. Louis now has available the ample funds voted by its citizens to develop airport facilities so that St. Louis can regain its position on the schedules of the main trunk air lines. In order for St. Louis to gain its proper place as one of the major airports of the country it must have the required facilities, such as hangars, repair shops, etc., where the air lines can house and service the big planes which will then use the St. Louis airport as an originating and terminating point of transcontinental flights. This would mean flights that originate and terminate in St. Louis at reasonable hours so the citizens of St. Louis will not have to proceed to the airport at such hours as midnight or 4 o'clock in the morning or to arrive at similarly inconvenient times, using planes which are not based in St. Louis, but stop over at St. Louis on their way between other metropolitan centers. Until St. Louis is the origination and termination of flights there is no certainty that even such service as it now has will be maintained when points of origination and termination have a normal commercial priority over intermediate stations.

The need for real air transportation service is urgent. If air cargo is to be devoloped, an air-cargo depot is needed right now. The citizens have voted the money. But the various Federal agencies are today, more than a full year since the cessation of fighting, continuing to insist upon retaining control of every facility offered by the city in its war effort. (See exhibit A.) The city, obviously, dares not proceed to spend additional large sums of the taxpayers' money until it has definite assurance that it will have the use and the control of its own airport.

City's airport position critical

The city is in critical and immediate need of facilities, both for passenger and cargo planes, as well as a cargo depot. The need is now all the more urgent, for while the city has spent months attempting to arrive at an equitable solution with the Federal Government, summer has gone and winter is here, and the air lines must of necessity have hangars in which their planes can be housed and serviced in winter weather. It is conceivable that, if St. Louis does not demonstrate quickly that it can supply these required facilities, the city might well be bypassed as a major air terminal by the main trunk air lines who are already well along in their postwar plans.

II. HOW DID CITY GET INTO THIS SITUATION AND WHY?

How and why did city permit this?

The foregoing shows clearly that St. Louis faces a crisis in its air-transportation situation because vital areas of its airport are in the hands of Federal agencies.

A natural and fair question is, "How did these Federal agencies get control of the vital areas of St. Louis' airport?" and "Why did St. Louis turn these vital areas over to these Federal agencies?"

These questions are answered herewith.

Curtiss-Wright building

In 1940 the city of St. Louis leased 46.8 acres of land in Lambert-St. Louis Airport to the Curtiss-Wright Corp. with the understanding that the Defense Plant Corporation would finance a plant thereon in which airplanes would be manufactured for the United States Army.

A lease was signed and later amended and transferred to the Defense Plant Corporation. This lease provided that the Government could have the use of the land for 25 years if it was needed, provided that the plant was used for Government purposes. The city made no attempt to get a fair rental for this property but leased it to the Government for a nominal amount. The city also gave the free use of the airfield, including the testing of airplanes made in the plant. The city required very few restrictions, but it did include in the lease a provision that if anything other than airplanes or airplane parts were manufactured that the right to use the airfield would be canceled.

The city also had the all-important clause inserted in the lease which provided that in the event the Government wished to install a tenant which was not a department of the Government, the city should have the veto power and control of such tenancy. The city did not know at that time and does not know at this time of any other way to control its airport without having control of this all-important site.

Navy training station

The city, in 1941, transferred to the Navy Department a 21.5-acre piece of its airport opposite to the Curtiss-Wright site. For this the city accepted a token payment of only $50; the commercial value of this lease on an earning basis of its prominence and importance to the city's airport would easily be on a valuation of $1,000,000. The purpose of this was to enable the Navy to build and operate a naval training station, and the city gave the Navy the free and unrestricted use of the city's then-existing airfield, the only restriction being that it was to be used for training Navy pilots.

The city takes great pride in the Navy's statement that more and better pilots came from this area than any comparable area in the United States—and, especially important, these were among the first pilots to reach the combat areas.

The Army's lease

The city also leased (W-782-Eng-107) to the Army on May 1, 1942, the southwest corner of the airport, an 8.404-acre tract, for a token rent of $1.00 per year. The big city hangar on this site was used by the Army for the repairing and housing of planes and as a depot for Army Training Corps planes, and the Army encroached on the airfield proper to the extent of at least double the rented area for all the various air-forces functions, including testing and installation of bomber turrets.

Other concessions

The city of St. Louis made several other arrangements of this type in cooperating with the war effort. An example of this is the lease for the enclosed roof of the city's overcrowded Terminal Building, which is rented to the Army at a rental of 20 cents per year.

City's motives 100-percent patriotic

The foregoing makes it crystal clear that the city of St. Louis in all of its dealings with the Federal Government was motivated only by a desire to contribute all it could to its country's defense. Without thought of profit or even compensation, the city turned over large strategic areas of its airport to the Federal Government.

City paid operating expense of military airport

A factor of equal importance is that with these gifts the city let the Federal agencies take over control of the city's airport and in effect operated its airport for 5 years at the city's expense—$250,000 per year for 5 years—for the benefit of these agencies of the Federal Government. This is evident from the fact that 90.2 percent of the total number of commercial and military operations on the field from April 1, 1941, to November 1, 1946, were operations by military aircraft.

III. WHAT HAS CITY DONE TO RESOLVE ITS CRISIS?

Negotiations

The city has exercised the utmost patience and has assiduously followed every avenue of approach open to it to bring the matter to an equitable settlement as the following brief recounting plainly proves.

Meeting with Hon. John L. Sullivan, Admiral Salada, et al.

The Honorable W. C. PLOESER, Congressman from St. Louis, arranged for a meeting, and on Friday, May 24, 1946, Gen. Clifford W. Gaylord, chairman of the executive committee, St. Louis Airport Commission, Mayor Aloys P. Kaufmann, Hon. Milton M. Kinsey, president, Board of Public Service of St. Louis, proceeded to Washington and together with Congressman PLOESER met with the Navy's representatives in the office of the Honorable John L. Sullivan, Assistant Secretary of Navy for Air. In addition to the Assistant Secretary of Navy for Air, other Navy representatives were present including Rear Admiral Salada, Bureau of Aeronautics, Rear Adm. R. E. Jennings, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations—Air, Rear Adm. T. B. McQuiston, Bureau of Yards and Docks, and Capt. H. R. Nieman, Jr.

The city's representatives explained the necessity for the city's obtaining title to the Curtiss-Wright facilities and Lambert-St. Louis airport. It was pointed out by the city's representatives that the present lease on these facilities as well as other leases, easements, etc., would need to be canceled in order for the city to have control of the airfield and reduce to a minimum all flying which was now conflicting so seriously with commercial activities. The city's representatives also set forth the city's urgent need for space in the highway area and for the Curtiss-Wright building so that large planes of the main trunk air lines which wished to operate turn-about flights from the Lambert-St. Louis airport could be serviced. It was pointed out at this meeting that urgent requests had been received from American, Eastern, and the Chicago and Southern Air Lines for facilities so that they could inaugurate new flights at St. Louis. The city's representatives advised the Navy that the city was willing to have McDonnell Aircraft Corp. continue to occupy space they actually needed in the Curtiss-Wright facilities, but it was agreed among all the conferees that McDonnell's present arrangement of his plant and equipment was inefficient and that he was occupying a great deal more space than was required.

In view of the urgency of the situation, the Navy agreed to send representatives to St. Louis early the next week to discuss the matter.

Captain Pihl in St. Louis

In accordance with arrangements made at the meeting on May 24, 1946, in Assistant Secretary Sullivan's office, Capt. P. E. Pihl and Lt. Jeffries Pace of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics called at the office of Milton M. Kinsey, president of the Board of Public Service on Tuesday, May 28, at which time Mr. Kinsey again outlined the city's immediate need for space in the highway area and its need to regain control of its airport.

On Wednesday, May 29, representatives of the city including Mr. James V. Frank of the law department, and Mr. Kinsey met with Captain Pihl, Commander Baldwin, Lieutenant Pace, of the Navy, Mr. McDonnell, Mr. Williams, and Mr. Drake, of McDonnell Aircraft Corp., and Mr. George Logan.

Captain Pihl set forth the Navy's position that Curtiss-Wright facilities were to be retained as one of the group of seven or eight reserve plants, and although he agreed that the underlying lease was given by the city on a patriotic basis, he doubted that the city's desire to secure title to the building was possible of accomplishment.

It was agreed that the city was in immediate and desperate need of space in the highway area and various plans were discussed for giving the city from 80,000 to 160,000 square feet of that area.

McDonnell's proposal vetoed by AAL

On Friday, May 31, Hon. Milton M. Kinsey, president, Board of Public Service, Col. James H. Howard, director of aeronautics in St. Louis, and Mr. Ken Crago, of American Airlines proceeded to Lambert Field and held a discussion with Mr. J. S. McDonnell and Mr. Drake, of McDonnell Aircraft Corp. At this meeting Mr. McDonnell submitted a plan whereby the city would receive 65,000 square feet of space in an irregular shape in which he stated five DC-4 could be accommodated if the air lines were willing to use dollies and jockey the planes into position with a tractor.

Mr. Crago immediately characterized this plan as wholly unsatisfactory to American Airlines, and Mr. McDonnell agreed to prepare another plan increasing the area to 85,000 square feet.

Admiral McQuiston in St. Louis

On Tuesday, June 4, 1946, a meeting was held at Lambert Field at which the following were present: Mayor Kaufman, General Gaylord, Milton M. Kinsey, and James H. Howard, representing the city; Rear Admiral McQuiston, Captain Nieman, Captain Lyons, Commander Cleave, and others representing the Navy. Admiral McQuiston opened the meeting by declaring that after a great deal of thought and since the meeting of May 24 and a careful examination of other fields in the vicinity of St. Louis, he had definitely decided that Lambert-St. Louis Airport was the only field which the Navy found satisfactory for the Naval Air Station. After this pronouncement, Admiral McQuiston stated that it was not the Navy's policy to permit their flights to interfere in any way with commercial aviation. He agreed that the city was entitled to be reimbursed by the Navy for the Navy's use of Lambert Field.

The city's representatives expressed grave doubt that the Navy could continue to utilize Lambert Field as their Naval Training Station and still not interfere with commercial aviation.

Meeting in Congressman Ploeser's office with Navy

On Wednesday, July 24, 1946, the Honorable WALTER C. PLOESER and Mr. Frank McGregor proceeded to Washington and Mr. PLOESER called to his office for a meeting at 10 a. m. Rear Adm. H. B. Salada and Capt. P. E. Pihl. At this meeting the city's representatives explained to the Navy's representatives the city's urgent need for space in the highway area and discussed the possibility of having the Curtiss-Wright facilities declared surplus.

The Navy's representatives reluctantly agreed that the city could have 140,000 square feet of the highway area but insisted that this should be on a temporary basis, preferably for 1 year. The city's representatives explained that this would be practically of no value to the city, because the air lines must of necessity be assured of permanent hangar space if they were to inaugurate "turn about" flights at the Lambert-St. Louis Airport. Furthermore, under present building conditions, it is extremely unlikely that hangar facilities could be constructed within a year. The Navy's representatives finally agreed that the city should have possession of the 140,000 square feet of the highway area for 3 years.

The Navy's representatives further stated that if the Navy Department wrote a letter to the War Assets Administration declaring the Curtiss-Wright facilities surplus, it would be necessary to include some restrictions which would provide that McDonnell Aircraft Corp. should continue to occupy the premises so long as the Navy desired, and that in the event of an emergency the entire facility would be turned over to the Navy upon 90 days' notice.

Meeting in Ploeser's office with Navy, RFC, and WAA

Following the meeting with the Navy's representatives earlier in the forenoon, another meeting was held in Congressman PLOESER'S office at 11:30 a. m., Wednesday, July 24, 1946. Those present were Hon. Walter C. Ploeser; Mr. L. A. Kelley, associate counsel, RFC; Mr. E. L. Bridges, Chief, Industrial Branch, Legal Division, WAA; Mr. W. O. Manley, Director, Airport Division, WAA; Mr. Patrick H. Clark, WAA; Lt. J. Jeffries Pace, Bureau of Aeronautics; Capt. P. E. Pihl, special assistant to Chief of Bureau of Aeronautics; and Frank McGregor.

Representatives of WAA stated that they did not believe they could accept a declaration of surplus which had restrictions such as those the Navy indicated they intended to include, and that in any event WAA would not classify the Curtis-Wright facilities as airport facilities and transfer title of them to the city.

Following these meetings, Frank McGregor remained in Washington for 10 days and held numerous meetings with members of the Navy, RFC, and WAA. As a result of all of these conferences, the Navy finally wrote a letter setting forth the conditions under which it would declare the Curtiss-Wright facilities surplus (see exhibit C), and WAA eventually agreed to accept such a declaration of surplus. WAA, however, insisted that the Curtiss-Wright facilities could not be given to the city as surplus facilities but would have to be purchased by the city as surplus industrial facilities.

WAA: Not airport facilities

War Assets stated that they felt their classification committee would so rule regardless of the fact that the highway area would be used for airplane housing and maintenance and regardless of the fact that it might be entirely separated by divisional wall from the rest of the building. It seemed that the classification committee would make a ruling to avoid the responsibility of explaining such rule to other cities not entirely in conformity but somewhat similarly situated.

Possible purchase from WAA

The city's representatives discussed with WAA the possibility of the city's buying the Curtiss-Wright facilities and WAA stated that the cost of constructing the facilities south of the Wabash tracks was approximately $9,500,000 and approximately $2,000,000 for facilities north of the tracks. WAA's first asking price of the facilities for negotiating purposes was $5,500,000 which they indicated they were willing to cut in half.

Mr. Kelley re city's damages

Meetings were held August 8 and 9, 1946, at St. Louis at which Mr. L. A. Kelley, associate counsel of RFC, Mr. Lee, St. Louis office of RFC, Captain Pihl, Captain Garton, and Lieutenant Pace of the Navy Department were present with representatives of the city including Hon. Walter C. Ploeser, Gen. C. W. Gaylord, Milton M. Kinsey, James Frank, and Frank McGregor. After prolonged discussion Mr. Kelley stated that if the city could show that it had suffered damages in a substantial amount, there was no law, no ruling, and no precedent to prevent the Board of RFC from renting to the city those parts of the Curtiss-Wright facilities the city needed at a nominal rental sufficient to cover RFC's dispersals for the maintenance of these parts of the facilities. The plan was that the city could in turn rent these facilities to the air lines at going rentals and thus liquidate some of the damages sustained because of the Federal installations on the city's airport.

A special meeting was held on August 9, 1946, with General Gaylord, Milton M. Kinsey, James Frank, L. A. Kelley, Mr. Lee, Lt. Pace, and Frank McGregor present. Mr. Kelley instructed and advised the city's counsel and other city representatives how to prepare the memorandum setting forth these damages.

The city prepared a memorandum in accordance with this advice from Mr. Kelley which showed that even a partial computation established damages at $3,540,000.

This memorandum was presented to RFC in its office in Washington on September 6, 1946, by Frank McGregor. During the 10 days the city's representative remained in Washington for the purpose, meetings were held with Mr. Kelley, Mr. Frank C. Ronan, Executive Director, Office of Defense Plants, RFC, and Mr. Alan Brown, Assistant Chief Counsel, Office of Defense Plants, RFC.

Mr. Kelley reverses himself

At these meetings Mr. Kelley reversed his position and stated that even though the city had suffered damages to the extent set forth in the memorandum, it was not the responsibility of RFC. The three gentlemen of RFC stated flatly that they would not recommend to the RFC Board that it proceed along the lines discussed so optimistically by Mr. Kelley at the meetings in St. Louis a short time earlier.

Mr. Kelley interprets underlying lease

Mr. Kelley further maintained, with the support of Messrs. Ronan and Brown, that while the provisions in the ground lease (Plancor 17A) were binding on the city as to all of the city's obligations thereunder, the provisions were invalid which provided that the tenant of the building must be approved by the city and would forfeit his right to use the airfield if he manufactured anything other than airplanes or airplane parts. These gentlemen said the latter two provisions were "bad law" and Mr. Kelley expressed himself as quite confident that in the event of a court action he could obtain the court's approval of his interpretation.

WAA indicates interest in $500,000 bid

On Friday, September 13, 1946, the city's representative, Frank McGregor, again called on Mr. E. L. Bridges, Chief, Industrial Bureau, Legal Division, WAA, to discuss the possibility of purchase of the Curtiss-Wright facilities from WAA, when declared surplus in accordance with the Navy letter referred to above. The Navy's expressed desire to keep these facilities as a "reserve plant" was discussed, and Mr. Bridges agreed that this restriction would definitely limit the number of possible purchasers and would drastically affect the sale price of the facilities. At the conclusion of the interview, Mr. Bridges agreed that if the Navy were to hold the facilities as a "reserve plant," WAA would consider a bid of $500,000, but if the Navy removed the "reserve" classification WAA would probably insist on $1,000,000.

First trip of mayor and others to Washington

On September 25, 1946, Hon. Walter C. Ploeser, Mayor A. P. Kaufmann, Postmaster B. F. Dickmann, and Gen. C. W. Gaylord, chairman of the executive committee of the airport commission, Frank McGregor, and Ray Raleigh proceeded to Washington. Two meetings were held with staff members of the RFC—Mr. Frank P. Ronan, Executive Director, Office of Defense Plants, RFC, and Mr. Lynas A. Kelley, Associate Counsel, Office of Defense Plants, RFC, Hon. Walter C. Ploeser and the city's representatives present. At these two meetings, on September 26 and 27, respectively, the RFC representatives presented several proposals, the final one of which proposed:

RFC proposition

RFC lease to the city of St. Louis the 140,000 square feet of highway area and the buildings north of the Wabash tracks for a period of 3 years, subject to examination in 3 years by the Navy to see if the lease could be extended beyond that period.

The city pay rent of $1 per year plus maintenance plus proportionate share of the taxes—probably about one-fifth. (There are no taxes on city-owned property.)

Elimination of the provision for a free airport, landing fees to be paid on a commercial basis by all parties using this airport—this to include Federal agencies.

The city's right to approve or disapprove the tenancy of the Curtiss-Wright buildings to be eliminated from lease, but some reasonable limitation be worked out as to the uses of the buildings.

Navy have the right to declare the property surplus at any time and city's lease would expire coincidental to this declaration of surplus by the Navy.

Meeting with Hon. John Snyder

Following the meeting in the office of Mr. Ronan on Friday, September 27, General Gaylord and Postmaster Dickmann had a meeting with Hon. John W. Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury, in his office. Mr. Snyder expressed great interest in the city's airport problem and suggested that the gentlemen discuss the matter with some members of the RFC Board, and said he would endeavor to arrange an appointment. Mr. Snyder telephoned immediately, and upon finding the several directors he telephoned out of town, suggested that he would make an appointment in the near future, at which time these gentlemen could be interviewed.

Second visit of mayor et al. to Washington

Consequently, on Tuesday, October 1, Mayor Kaufmann, Postmaster Dickmann, and General Gaylord proceeded to Washington and met with Mr. George S. Allen, Director of the RFC. Mr. Allen introduced them to Mr. Louis Bean, who was described by Mr. Allen as RFC's trouble-shooter, and Mr. Allen then assigned Mr. Bean to the job of helping the city's representatives get the airport situation settled to the city's satisfaction.

RFC's revised offer

Mr. Bean conducted the city's representatives to the office of Mr. L. A. Kelley, associate counsel, Office of Defense Plants, RFC, where, after some discussion, Mr. Kelley agreed that RFC would lease the city the highway area and the property north of the tracks for $1 per year, and that RFC would drop its demand that the city relinquish its authority to approve or disapprove any tenant in the Curtiss-Wright Building.

Mr. Kelley stated that RFC could give a lease to the city, but that it was subject to being terminated if at any time the Navy decided that it wished to surrender the premises. Under these circumstances, McDonnell Aircraft Corp. would move from the buildings, the Navy would declare the buildings surplus, and they would be transferred to WAA for disposal.

Mr. Kelley said, however, that the city could obtain an agreement from WAA at the time the lease for the building was made with RFC. This agreement could provide that WAA would agree to permit the city to retain possession of the premises until the termination date. Mr. Bean later advised the city's representatives that RFC could obtain this letter for the city from WAA.

Meeting at WAA

The city's representatives again communicated with the Secretary of the Treasury, John W. Snyder, who arranged a meeting for them with Major General Littlejohn, WAA Administrator and his deputies, Mr. Robertson and General O'Brien. However, neither of these two gentlemen attended the meeting and the city's representatives conferred in a conference room at the Railroad Retirement Building with Mr. Fuller, Acting Department Administrator, WAA; Mr. O. H. Beasley, Chief, General Manufacturing Branch Real Property, WAA; Mr. A. H. Green, attorney, Office of Real Property Disposal, Legal Division; and Mr. E. R. Heiberg, special assistant, Office of Field Service, WAA. The proposition of declaring the Curtiss-Wright building surplus and giving it to the city of St. Louis as airport facilities was discussed and vetoed by the WAA representatives.

WAA's selling price

The proposition of the city's buying the building was then discussed and Mr. Beasley said the Curtiss-Wright building south of the tracks cost over $9,000,000 and the building north of the tracks cost over $2,000,000 and the WAA put a valuation of $5,500,000 on it. He indicated that WAA would consider cutting the price at this time to $2,750,000 if the city wanted to buy the building. However, before the city's representatives left the building, Mr. Beasley withdrew even this figure.

Beasley's lecture on patriotism

During this discussion Mr. Beasley delivered a lecture on patriotism to Mayor Kaufmann and the other representatives of the city. The theme of Mr. Beasley's lecture was that the city of St. Louis should be willing to permit the installations of the Federal Government to continue to occupy, dominate and control Lambert-St. Louis Airport as a patriotic gesture. Mr. Beasley did not indicate any plan St. Louis might follow to provide a place and facilities for main trunk air lines to land their planes and have them garaged and serviced so that the city might regain its prewar position on the air schedules of the air lines. In fact Mr. Beasley did not indicate by word or action that he felt that St. Louis had any right to be on the national air-lines schedules at all.

WAA banking on Kelley's new attitude

The War Assets people gratuitously assured the city's representatives that they were sure Mr. Kelley would be successful in persuading the courts that his opinion was correct as to the invalidity of the city's veto power of a tenant in the Curtiss-Wright building. They stated that they had seen Mr. Kelley win a great many cases for the Federal Government. They were quite frank in stating that this greatly enhanced the value of the buildings, and that they were relying on this opinion to substantially increase the amount of money the Federal Government expected to get for the buildings.

WAA demurs at assuring city possession of buildings

The city's representatives then inquired as to the possibility of receiving a letter from WAA assuring the city possession of the buildings for the full tenure of their lease in the event the facilities were declared surplus. Mr. Fuller stated that the WAA would be unable to advise RFC without all the facts, and also the Army and the Navy must both approve. He added that any decision made by WAA must be so made that it would be able to make like decisions for other cities.

RFC rescinds its offer

Before leaving Washington, the city's representatives communicated with Miss Kelley in Secretary Snyder's office and a meeting was arranged for the city's representatives with the top officials of the WAA for Monday, October 7. The date of this meeting was later changed to Thursday, October 10. On Monday, October 7, Mr. Bean telephoned Mayor Kaufmann in St. Louis and said that RFC had again reversed itself and had withdrawn its proposition of renting the city the space in the Curtiss-Wright facilities for $1, and further stated that RFC now declared that no lease of any kind could be made unless the city agreed to the elimination of the clause in the underlying ground lease which permits the city to approve or disapprove any tenant in the Curtiss-Wright building. In view of this, immediate plans for a further meeting were abandoned.

Federal agencies' shabby treatment of city's representatives

The foregoing recitation of the dodging, twisting, and turning of the Federal agencies in Washington is both illuminating and distressing. Their attempts to hide behind technicalities, their practice of submitting proposals and then repudiating them, and even their arrogant attempts to intimidate the representatives of St. Louis out of their legal rights as written in a contract are not, we submit, the accepted pattern of the way one echelon of a democratic government should treat another echelon of that same government. The machinations of these Federal agencies have been characterized as the Washington run-around. The history of St. Louis' honest efforts to assist these same agencies in time of war does not, we believe, justify such shabby treatment.

IV. HOW HAVE FEDERAL AGENCIES COOPERATED?

The attitude of the Federal agencies concerned and their effect on the city's postwar airport crisis do not make a pretty picture. There is no instance where one of these agencies has moved to assist the city in its efforts to extricate itself from the crisis which now confronts it.

It is a strange fact that these Federal agencies to whom the city practically gave its airport with all expenses paid for the duration of the war are prolonging and intensifying the city's postwar aviation crisis. Neither have these Federal agencies hesitated to seize upon any technicality nor even arrogantly violated the city's contractual rights in their determined efforts to continue to control the city's airport.

The Army's exit

Now let us look at the Federal Government's handling of the Curtiss-Wright building built by Defense Plant Corporation on land leased for a nominal fee to the Federal Government.

The Curtiss-Wright Co., continued to manufacture planes and parts in this building erected on the city's airport until the summer of 1945 when information was received that the Army, in curtailing its airplane production, was preparing to have these facilities declared surplus. The city moved at that time to have title to these facilities transferred to the city and received verbal assent from the War Assets Administration that in the absence of higher priority interference such transfer could be made of the property, as surplus airport facilities, to the city.

Navy moves McDonnell in Curtiss-Wright building

However, the Navy Department, exercising its higher priority, took over the Curtiss-Wright building on loan from the Army and in October 1945 the city received a letter from RFC, who was acting in behalf of the Navy, requesting approval of the tenancy of McDonnell Aircraft Corp., a company developing airplanes for the Navy Department. Although the city never gave this approval, as required by the ground lease, McDonnell Aircraft Corp. was moved into the building without the knowledge or consent of the city of St. Louis.

The McDonnell problem

The McDonnell Aircraft Corp. still occupies and controls all of the Curtiss-Wright building. The RFC installed the McDonnell Aircraft Corp. in the Curtiss-Wright building through the device of a letter of intent. The provisions of this letter gave McDonnell the right to occupy the premises and manufacture anything any Government agency requests even though the intent of the city's ground lease was to provide that only airplanes and airplane parts can be manufactured. McDonnell is thus spread out over the entire building which he obviously does not need, for his peak employment is 3,000 employees, while Curtiss-Wright, when it occupied the building, employed as many as 16,000 people.

The arrangement also contemplates McDonnell's free and unrestricted use of the city's airfield at any and all times.

According to a letter written to the city by RFC dated October 15, 1945, the rent charged to McDonnell for all this space and these privileges is $1 per year.

One of the agonizing factors of the city's position is the attitude that McDonnell has taken. The city approached the Navy Department and RFC with a suggestion that some of the surplus space not needed by McDonnell, including 140,000 square feet of the highway area, which the city needs so badly to house commercial air-line planes, be transferred to the city. Upon hearing this, Mr. McDonnell took the position that he and his company has been sold down the river and threatened that if the city did not cease "persecuting" him, he would move his plant to another city.

McDonnell's maneuvering re prefabricated housing in Curtiss-Wright building

And now McDonnell has developed a new project. Within the last 30 days, the McDonnell Corp. has expressed its intention of manufacturing prefabricated houses in the Curtiss-Wright building and has, in fact, carried on negotiations with the Federal Housing Administration to this end. McDonnell, in doing this, is relying, apparently, on the letter of intent given to it by RFC. High-ranking naval officers have assured the city's representatives that this letter of intent has all the force and competency of a formal contract or lease.

At the time McDonnell did this, there was available (and still is) ample unoccupied Federal Government-owned manufacturing space in the vicinity of St. Louis which McDonnell could easily have obtained if he seriously desired to manufacture prefabricated houses.

The explanation for McDonnell's maneuvering becomes apparent when it is realized that a directive from the Housing Administrator for McDonnell to manufacture prefabricated houses in the Curtiss-Wright building would at that time have been binding on the RFC and the Navy, and the letter of intent written by RFC to McDonnell gave him the right to manufacture anything required by any Federal Government agency.

This is contrary to the provisions of the underlying ground lease, but had the city protested, it is quite probable that it would have been put in the position of hindering the production of prefabricated houses in the face of the acute housing shortage that plagues the Nation.

Army's $1 lease

What of the tract with the big city hangar rented to the Army for $1 per year?

The United States engineers speaking for the War Department have indicated that the Army no longer needs this 8.4-acre tract and the big hangar which the city turned over to it at a token rental of $1 per year and is prepared to declare it surplus.

In dozens of similar cases all over the country, where the Federal Government had actually purchased the land and spent millions of dollars erecting runways and buildings on it, the properties have been declared surplus airport facilities and transferred to the cities free. Not so in the case of St. Louis even though the city owns the land and built all the facilities on the airport.

The city has been reliably informed that the United States engineers consider this $1-a-year lease a valuable property and is peddling it to other Government agencies.

RFC's attitude toward ground lease

RFC maintains an adamant position. In numerous meetings held between representatives of the city of St. Louis and RFC, RFC has maintained that it was completely within its rights in issuing its letter of intent turning over the Curtiss-Wright property with all the additional privileges conveyed to McDonnell in violation of the provisions of the underlying lease.

RFC further contends that the city has signed a lease renting land to the Federal Government for 25 years and that these provisions of the lease are valid and must be honored.

RFC on the other hand contends just as stanchly that the provisions in the lease which provide that no tenant should be moved into the building without the city's approval and the provision that nothing but airplanes and airplane parts can be manufactured in the building without loss of the privileges of the flying field are not valid and they aver that the Supreme Court will uphold RFC's contention.

In other words, it is RFC's contention that all provisions in the lease are valid which give rights to the top echelon, the Federal Government, but the provisions that give rights to the city of St. Louis, another echelon of our Government, are invalid.

RFC's tactics

RFC would appear to be so eager to save its face that it would be willing to use the power of the top echelon of the Federal Government to "bull through" the provisions of its letter of intent to McDonnell Aircraft Corp. at the expense of and in complete disregard of the rights of another echelon of our Government—the city of St. Louis—that it would risk a suit for damages from McDonnell.

In the event the city decides to avail itself of its legal remedies and evict McDonnell from the premises, since he is there without the city's approval in direct violation of the city's underlying ground lease, it would appear that RFC would be liable for damages to McDonnell for loss of the following privileges given McDonnell in the letter of intent:

1. Occupancy and control of the entire Curtiss-Wright building.

2. Free and unrestricted use of the city airfield at all times.

3. Manufacturing of any product needed by any Federal agency.

Navy's attitude

The Navy's attitude has progressed from a disinterest in the city's airport problems and a determination to keep for itself what the Navy had at Lambert-St. Louis Airport to one of reluctant acquiescence to the city's temporarily regaining certain parts of its airport now under the control of the Navy. On other parts the Navy has continued adamant in its determination to hold on.

Navy's concessions re Curtiss-Wright facilities

At the outset when negotiations were started the Navy told the city bluntly that the McDonnell Aircraft Corp. had been installed in the Curtiss-Wright facilities at $1 rent per year, and if the city wished to secure space in the building it should negotiate with McDonnell. This attitude on the part of Navy was not acceptable to the city in view of the fact that McDonnell had been illegally installed in the building by RFC at the request of the Navy without the consent or knowledge of the city in violation of the underlying ground lease which provides that no tenant other than a department of the Federal Government can be installed in the building unless the city had first approved the tenant.

Navy rewarding McDonnell at city's expense

The Navy's explanation for installing McDonnell at $1 per year was that McDonnell had done good experimental and development work for the Navy, and the Navy wished to reward McDonnell.

The melancholy truth from the city's point of view is that the Navy is rewarding McDonnell at the expense of the city, and in so doing is contributing to the strangling of the city's already partially suffocated aviation program.

St. Louis has no objection to the Navy's rewarding of McDonnell for past performances. The city does, however, object to the Navy's doing it at the expense of St. Louis' future in aviation.

The Navy has gradually and reluctantly made some temporary concessions. It has agreed to arrange for the city to have some 140,000 square feet in the highway area of the Curtiss-Wright building south of the Wabash railroad tracks and possession of the building north of those tracks. But there is a joker to the agreement to give the city 140,000 square feet of highway area—it is limited to 3 years, at which time the space must be turned back to the Navy.

City could be evicted on moment's notice

In the event the Navy decides to cancel its contract with McDonnell and declare the Curtiss-Wright facilities surplus, the city is to be evicted from both the highway area in the building south of the tracks as well as the building north of the Wabash Railroad tracks, unless the city can make some arrangement with WAA to stay awhile longer. The city's unhappy attempts to get some reasonable proposition from WAA have been described in the accounts of the meetings held between the city's representatives and those of WAA.

It can be seen in what a precarious situation the city would be placed when it is understood that the Navy has the right to cancel its contract with McDonnell at any time and declare the facilities surplus. Under this set-up, the city could well find itself dispossessed a month or even a day after it signed its agreement with the Navy or RFC as the Navy's agent.

We submit that this is a sleazy foundation on which to build an aviation program. How are main trunk air lines to be attracted to St. Louis if they are in danger of being evicted from the hangars in which their planes are to be housed and serviced on a moment's notice?

Navy's position re naval training station

The Navy's position remains unyielding regarding the 21.5 acres turned over to it by the city for $50 to be used as a naval training station. The only concession the Navy has made has been to promise that Navy pilots will not train on Lambert Field. That is, the planes will still be stationed at the air-training station, will take off from Lambert Field, and land there upon returning, often in large groups that usurp the landing field for long periods of time to the hazard, detriment, and delay of commercial main trunk air-line planes.

Obviously, this is no solution to the city's problem. The city must have its sole major airport free of military aircraft so that the major air-line planes can land safely and on schedule.

Further, the city needs the hangars now being used by the Navy. The Navy, however, insists that Lambert-St. Louis Airport is the only one in the St. Louis area that meets its requirements (see Admiral McQuiston's statement in report on meeting at the airport June 4, 1946), and the Navy has indicated that it fully intends to hold this tract of land, and, further, it plans to continue to use Lambert-St. Louis Airport.

Navy training and commercial aviation

The Navy still operates the naval training station it constructed on the 21½ acres transferred to it by the city for $50, and has not indicated by word or action any intention of returning this property to the city, even though the surrender of Japan came over a year ago. Astounding as it may be, the Navy gives every indication of planning to enlarge this station and of continuing to operate it indefinitely. The impossibility of such a plan is obvious.

The inconsistency of military air training and commercial flying at the same airfield need not be labored. It is evident on the face of it that they are innately incompatible. On the one hand we have piloting the commercial airplane a man with hundreds of flying hours indoctrinated with a supreme regard for safety. His one duty toward which every effort is concentrated is to avoid danger and land his passengers at their destination safely.

The military flyer, on the other hand, is far apart from this concept of flying. Surely, he wants to bring his plane back safely and walk away from each landing. However, he is and must of necessity be trained to be a daring flyer. If he is ever going to be a good military pilot, he must take chances that a commercial air-line's pilot would avoid assiduously.

There have been incidents of pilots from the naval training station who, in their youthful exuberance, have violated the laws governing flying and flown dangerously low over heavily populated areas, "buzzed" residents, homes, and so forth. These incidents, however, while detrimental to aviation in St. Louis, do not constitute the major problem. The Navy's statement that pilots will not practice at Lambert-St. Louis Airport, but will just take off there, practice elsewhere and land, and then proceed to their station does not solve the problem.

It is the fundamental difference between military and civilian commercial flying and the hazard that is created when the two are located at the same place that makes it imperative that the situation be rectified.

Increased traffic volume brings a separate and different problem not one whit less vital to the operation of St. Louis Airport. There are, in fact, two separate factors. First, as discussed above, the hazard inherent in the differences in equipment, operational practices, procedures, and attitudes deliberately acquired by training; and, second, control of the volume of traffic. Naturally, greater traffic congestion might markedly increase any element of hazard due to difference in equipment and operation. But an increase in the volume of traffic may also affect the hazard and the volume of military traffic is for all practical matters entirely outside the control of the airport authorities or CAA. This refers to instrument as well as contact flying. Thus, even assuming that the military will eventually submit to all CAA controls on all occasions in exact conformance to commercial flying and disregarding the weakness of CAA having to deal with military organizations and not directly and individually with the military personnel who unlike commercial pilots are unlicensed, we still have the volume problem since no other organization can so completely preempt the traffic lanes by sheer numbers.

Already many have expressed reluctance to fly on planes operating from Lambert-St. Louis Airport because of this jeopardy. In view of the considerable number of passengers carried by the large four-motored planes, it is not pleasant to contemplate the magnitude of the disaster that might result if one of these young Navy pilots were to crash his fast, "hot" plane into a big, slower, and much less maneuverable commercial plane prior to its landing or after the take-off from Lambert Field. Apart from the tragic loss of life in such an accident, the effect on the attitude of the flying public toward St. Louis Airport is incalculable.

The Navy has not paid 1 cent for the use of the city's airport.

Navy had city's only major airport blocked

To sum up, we see that the Navy has maneuvered so that it has the city's sole major airport blocked in on the north by the 48-acre Curtiss-Wright facilities and on the south by the 21.5-acre naval training station and, except for a period of 3 years when the city will be permitted to use part of the Curtiss-Wright building, the Navy plans to hold these blocks indefinitely in a total disregard of the ruinous consequences to St. Louis' air-transportation future.

Army engineers and city's land and hangar

The Army engineers have stated publicly that they no longer need the 8.4-acre tract and the big city hangar thereon leased to them by the city for $1 per year. However, they have categorically refused to return it to the city and are, in fact, now in the process of peddling this lease to other Government agencies as a "valuable property."

Army engineers in administration building

The Army engineers have advised the city, in an official communication in words more blunt than courteous, that they propose to transfer their 20-cents-per-year lease for the enclosed top of the city's administration building to another Federal agency—regardless of the fact that their emergency is over and they no longer need the space for which the city is entitled to use for the best interests of its citizens and to charge normal rentals if leased to others.

City's air in war crisis

When the top echelon of our Government faced the crisis of all-out war, the city of St. Louis rushed forward to help and turned over strategic areas of its airport for the duration of that crisis.

City now faces crisis

Now, as the direct result of its efforts to help win the war, the city faces a crisis in its air-transportation program. The crisis of war has been liquidated and the purpose for which the land was turned over has been achieved—the war has been won. But the top echelon takes no heed of the city's plight. No cognizance is taken of the spirit of patriotism and unselfishness that impelled the city to turn over vital areas of its airport for the duration. Every technicality is seized upon and these Federal agencies even violate the city's rights, as set forth in the documents mutually signed.

City's motives impugned

The city is treated with the cold, evasive technique usually reserved for an anxious and none-too-scrupulous trader. Astonishing as it may be, the Federal agencies have impugned the city's motives and declared that "the city must have had some powerful and far-reaching motive of self-interest in turning these tracts over to the armed services of the United States."

Federal agencies return evil for good

In summarizing the effect the actions of the Federal Government are having upon the St. Louis aviation crisis we are forced to the conclusion that evil is being returned for good.

V. WHAT IS SOLUTION?

City demands restoration

The city of St. Louis now calls upon the Federal agencies involved to cease their high-jinks, abandon their dilatory and evasive tactics, and restore to the city its properties which were turned over by the city to these Federal agencies to help them wage war.

The city of St. Louis has been wearied by the lectures on patriotism delivered, on occasion, to the mayor and other representatives by the bureaucrats in Washington who, at the same time, were coldly interpreting the rules pertaining to the municipal airfield, the same as if it were a commercial enterprise, and seizing upon every possible technicality to maintain their throttling hold on the city's airport.

The people of St. Louis would like to know if "patriotism" requires that the expenses cannot be divided among all of the 140,000,000 people of the country, but must be saddled on the 1,000,000 people of St. Louis. Or has St. Louis been singled out as the one city which is to have all of the postwar patriotism for the whole nation?

St. Louis has amply demonstrated its patriotism by turning over its airport to the armed services for the duration of hostilities—the city paying for the operation of the airport during that time.

Federal Government's gifts to other cities

The city of St. Louis knows that all over this country the Federal Government has given airports worth millions of dollars to cities. These airports were constructed by agencies of the Federal Government and paid for out of Federal funds—the cities, in many cases, not having one penny invested in the airport.

In other cases the Federal Government bought airports from cities, used them during the war, spent millions of dollars improving these airports, and has now returned the airports to the cities absolutely free.

St. Louis demands modest

St. Louis' demands are modest, indeed, when compared to these millions of dollars worth of airport facilities given to other cities throughout the country by the Federal Government.

The city wants the land it loaned to the Federal Government, to help with the war, to be returned now that the war is over.

All agree war measure

It is time now to call a halt to the machinations and tricks of the bureaucrats and face the issues.

The prudent city fathers of St. Louis in normal peacetimes would not have signed these unilateral leases which give the Federal Government all of the safeguards, including a 30-day cancellation clause, while the city has no such protection. Obviously these were entered into as emergency wartime measures, and it was planned and expected that they would be canceled with the advent of victory and restoration made to the city.

Federal Government destroying St. Louis' air-transportation system

On the other hand, it is inconceivable that the higher echelon of Government would select strategic sites on the city's only airport, as these were selected, unless these echelons had in mind returning these properties to the city at the conclusion of the war. To assume that these Federal agencies plan to keep these sites in perpetuity would be to assume that they are recklessly unconcerned about the crisis in aviation faced by the city of St. Louis and could well be held accountable for destroying St. Louis as a main-trunk air-line terminal.

City has only one site—Government has many

It has been established earlier that the Lambert-St. Louis Airport is not alone the only airport which St. Louis has, capable of handling major air lines large planes, but that it is the only possible site available for years to come for a major airport.

We have, then, on one hand, St. Louis with only one possible airport which has been usurped so that St. Louis, which has already lost its preeminent place on the schedules of the major air lines is now in danger of being permanently bypassed by these main trunk air lines who are already well advanced in their postwar plans.

On the other hand, the Federal agencies who are at present "sitting tight" on these strategic and critical sites, have literally scores of locations from which to choose.

Obviously, in a democratic Government such as ours, one echelon of government cannot be permitted to frivolously and wantonly destroy a very important part of the transportation system of another echelon of the Government.

War purpose achieved

The purpose for which the city leased out the land on which the Curtiss-Wright facilities are built has been accomplished—airplanes were built in these facilities which helped to win the war. This land, with facilities built thereon, should be returned to the city of St. Louis. The city is entitled to have the land back, and for the Federal Government to destroy these buildings, which the city needs so desperately would be an act of pure vandalism.

McDonnell can remain in Curtiss-Wright building

The Navy Department and the McDonnell Aircraft Corp. need have no concern as to the latters' continued tenancy in the Curtiss-Wright building when title to that building is transferred to the city. The city is happy to have McDonnell continue to occupy that portion of the building needed by McDonnell on a legitimate basis whereby he pays a fair rental to the city for the space he occupies and fees for the privilege of using the city's airfield.

Navy should return land

The Navy should return the 21.5 acres which the city turned over to it for $50 so that the Navy might have a training station where fliers to fight the war could be trained. The hangars and other buildings constructed thereon by the city are needed right now by the city. There is no longer the slightest excuse for the Navy to usurp this essential part of the city's airport for the Navy has any number of other locations on which it can establish its training station without crippling some city's one and only major airport.

Army peddling lease

The Army engineers, the agency authorized to speak for the War Department, have already stated that the 8.4 acres on which is located the big city hangar, which they rented from the city for $1 per year, is no longer necessary to their program. The Army engineers are, in fact, peddling this lease as a valuable property to other Federal agencies. This, in itself, is a fact so scandalous that the only reason it has not created a tremendous reaction among the citizens is that the fact is not generally known. It is obvious that this property should be immediately returned to the city of St. Louis.

In returning the several tracts of the city's land, with the improvements constructed thereon, to the city, the Federal Government will not be "giving" anything to the citizens of St. Louis. The land was purchased by bond-issue money, voted and paid by the citizens of St. Louis.

The buildings were not constructed with some mysterious type of money created by the bureaucrats in Washington. They were built with money from the taxpayers, and the citizens of St. Louis have paid for them many times over.

They have served the purpose for which they were loaned to the Federal agencies and should now be returned to the city which needs them in order to solve its own present airport crisis.

VI. DAMAGES DUE CITY FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The effects of Federal Government installations on the physical lay-out and development of the airport

When the Federal Government has evacuated its various agencies from Lambert-St. Louis Airport and restored to the city the several tracts of land on which they are situated—as discussed earlier—then the city can start to fight its way back to the position to which it is entitled and which it held in air transportation before its airport was overwhelmed by the Federal agencies.

In order to get a picture of what has to be accomplished by the city to get back its rightful place in aviation, it is necessary to review the activities of these Federal agencies and assess the damage that has accrued to the airport as a direct result of these actions.

Curtiss-Wright damages

The construction of the Curtiss-Wright buildings on Lambert Field has resulted in an incalculable damage, because it constitutes a perpetual hazard to flying on the present runways and because the city must at great and increasing cost, presently of indeterminate extent, acquire new land, replan the development, and by resorting to engineering expediency, develop an airport equal to that which was originally assured.

City's airport usurped

The location of the Curtiss-Wright building, the Navy training station, and the Army's air station with their respective areas of activity extending out on the flying field have already so hemmed in and hampered the city's airport that the city's original development program has had to be permanently and drastically changed, forcing expansion onto new land, which has had to be acquired. The bare cost of this land, together with the additional expense of grading, draining, lighting, etc., is $2,590,000. This figure does not include the large additional work and expense which will be entailed, particularly in draining, but also in grading the usable part of the original airport to bring it to a mean level with the newly acquired section.

Damages due city for operation of airport for benefit of Federal agencies and additional construction costs

Thus, St. Louis not only has built its airport solely at its own expense, but now, after 6 years of Government occupancy and control—November 1, 1940, to November 1, 1946—during which the city expended over $1,500,000 to maintain and amortize this city property, it must ask its citizens to expend at least $2,590,000 more than they otherwise would for the essential development of their airport, a total extra cost either spent to date or definitely determinable of $4,090,000.

Rentals due city

However, that is only a part of the damages suffered by the city. The Federal Government agencies who occupied (and insist on continuing to occupy) these strategic areas of the city's airport have either paid no rent to the city for the land occupied or have paid only a token rent and in no case was any pretense made of paying the city a fair rental for the land.

Damages due city for landing fees, physical damage to runways and abandonment of runways

Still other damages due the city from these Federal agencies include landing fees for military aircraft, physical damages to runways and the cost of abandonment of runways due to the Federal installations making certain runways unusable. These latter items amount to additional damages due the city in the amount of $2,424,210.21.

Total of $6,514,210.20 damages due city

Therefore, in addition to the incalculable damage caused to the city's airport program and its consequent retrogression in aviation, the city has actually suffered out-of-pocket cash damages to a total of $6,500,000 either spent to date or definitely determinable, all due entirely to the presence of the Federal installations and their Federal operation.

Details of damages on following pages

The damages as calculated by the city of St. Louis accounting and engineering departments are set forth on the following pages.

New airfield must be built

Exhibit B shows in black the official plan presently adopted for the expansion of the field and superimposed thereon in colors is an alternate lay-out for runways and terminal area which typifies what would have been adopted by the city had it been free to develop the field along original lines. The exhibit indicates clearly how drastically the original development has been modified due to the encroachment of Federal facilities.

With this visual picture of the pertinent facts in the record, it is now in order to establish by individual items the damages sustained by the city and the historical circumstances which occasioned them.

Total	6,514,210.21

Additional land

A discussion of each of the items of damage included in the preceding tabulation, together with an explanation of the method used in evaluating them follows.

Due to the existence of the Curtiss-Wright plant on city-owned property, thus making this property unavailable for expansion purposes, it was necessary to extend the airport into the territory eastwardly from Airport Road and to acquire the area bounded by Natural Bridge Road, Airport Road, Brown Road, and the present easterly property line. This area, which is shown on the attached sketch (exhibit B) comprises approximately 400 acres, and was purchased by the city at a cost averaging $1,000 per acre, or a total of $400,000.

Additional grading

Partly because of the additional area involved and partly because of the rough topography of this additional area, the spreading out of the runway pattern onto the area east of airport road will necessitate grading which would otherwise have been avoided. Detail and final grading plans have been prepared and a study of these indicates that approximately 1,400,000 cubic yards of grading will be necessary, however, 600,000 cubic yards of this can be utilized in other locations. Deducting this latter amount leaves 800,000 cubic yards directly attributable to the use of the area mentioned. Based on recent negotiations with contractors, it is our opinion that this grading will cost not less than 40 cents per cubic yard, or a total of $320,000.

Additional drainage

The city is now faced with the necessity for providing drainage on the additional 400 acres to be occupied. It is true that the drainage system for the entire field would be reduced in scope were it not for the added area, but to evaluate such an element would involve extensive calculations. The estimate, therefore, is confined only to the cost of drainage actually to be located east of airport road.

An analysis of the drainage and sewer plans, which are now in complete and final form, indicates that the elimination of this area would have saved the city approximately $235,000 in drainage construction on the new area alone. The drainage design for the original field would undoubtedly have effected a saving to the city of between two and three times this amount.

Additional paving

The adoption of a "spread out" runway pattern necessitated by the city's inability to make effective use of the land area already owned, will entail the construction of large additional quantities of concrete taxiways and runways.

A comparison between the officially adopted plan and the plan as shown on the attached sketch indicates that some 218,500 square yards of pavement have been added because of the location of the Curtiss-Wright building.

At prices now prevailing in St. Louis, as evidenced by recent contracts, this added pavement will cost in excess of $1,300,000.

Relocation of airport road

The present program requires the abandonment of Airport Road, which is a concrete paved highway owned and maintained by St. Louis County. Reference to exhibit B clearly indicates that this would have been unnecessary if a more compact runway pattern confined to the west of this road could have been adopted, as was originally intended.

The city is now engaged in negotiating with the St. Louis County Court for the abandonment of Airport Road, and, because of legal requirements, the city must stand the cost of providing a substitute route. The very minimum limit of such expense as measured by the investment in the present concrete pavement is $85,000.

In addition to the above, the removal of the concrete surface will be an added cost, as well as the additional right-of-way needed for the substitute road. Together these items, with associated expenses, will cost the city in excess of $15,000. The above makes a total in excess of $100,000.

Relocation of gasoline pipe lines

Parallel to and along the easterly side of Airport Road is a right-of-way easement on which the Shell Pipeline Corp. maintains a telephone line and two 10-inch pipe lines for the transportation of gasoline and other petroleum products between Oklahoma and Wood River, Ill.

Since the existence of the Curtiss-Wright building has made necessary the expansion of Lambert Field into the area east of Airport Road, the route of these pipe lines, as it now exists, would pass through the new terminal facilities, as well as under four of the new main runways. The Shell Co. is insisting that such a situation would be extremely hazardous, and that the pipe line be rerouted completely around the expanded air field. That company also maintains that the cost of such rerouting is a legal obligation of the city. Without admitting any obligations, there is a potential liability against the city for the cost of whatever measures may ultimately be decided upon.

Based on actual contractors' estimates, the cost of relocating this line will exceed $135,000.

Additional electrical installations

Due to the spread-out location of runways and taxiways, as well as to the additional area involved, the city will be required to install larger and longer electrical circuits, which, together with the added boundary, contact, warning, and range lights, are estimated to cost a minimum of $50,000.

Added maintenance

The added maintenance costs for pavements, electrical equipment, care of turf, fencing, and other items associated with the 400 acres east of Airport Road is estimated at $5,000 per year, or a total of $50,000 for a 10-year period, the minimum leasehold period.

Rental due city for land used by Curtiss-Wright building tenant

The 2,125,728 square feet of land occupied by the Curtiss-Wright building (Plancor 17A) constitutes a prize location as to all airport facilities, and in addition is located on the only available railroad. For several years space at Lambert Field has been at a premium and the area could have been rented for the past 5 years at an average of 5 cents per square foot, which is the rental now received for an adjoining area of considerably less value.

In addition to the 48.8 acres which it was entitled to use according to the terms of the lease, the tenant, without any authorization, appropriated 1,715,200 square feet as shown on exhibit A.

This land on the airport would be even more valuable than the Curtiss-Wright site. However, for the purposes of rendering this account, the rental is set at 5 cents per square foot, or $662,884 for 3,840,928 square feet.

Rental due for 2,125,728 square feet at 5 cents per square foot per year for 5⅝ years from Dec. 30, 1940, to Nov. 1, 1946 (48.8 acres) included in lease	$620,004
Rental due for 1,715,200 square feet at 5 cents per square foot per year for ½ year from April 1944 to November 1944, occupied without authorization	42,880
Total	662,884

Rental due on land and hangar occupied by naval air station

The Federal Government should pay a fair rental to the city of St. Louis for the land on which the naval air station is located as well as that area of the airfield used by the naval air station for parking

Navy planes without the consent of the city. (See exhibit A.)

The Navy has also fenced off a 30,000-square-foot tract of land west of the naval air station, the flying field which the Navy uses for parking automobiles by authority of a letter from Mr. Ray Schroeder dated January 1, 1945, and addressed to Commander Cleaves. The Navy has never paid 1 cent of rent for this space.

936,540 square feet (21.5 acres) included in the deed at 5 cents per square foot per year for 5⅔ years from Feb. 24, 1941, to Nov. 1, 1946	$265,353.00
728,000 square feet used on flying field for parking planes, without authorization, at 5 cents per square foot per year for 1½ years from October 1945 to Nov. 1, 1946	39,433.33
30,000 square feet used on flying field for parking automobiles at 5 cents per square foot per year for 1¾ years from February 1945 to Nov. 1, 1946	2,625.00
Total	307,411.33

Fair rental from War Department

The Corps of Engineers of the United States Army has occupied 366,078 square feet (8.404 acres) for 4½ years, from May 1, 1942, to November 1, 1946, as authorized by lease (W-782-Eng-107), and, in addition, has occupied 649,600 square feet on the flying field as shown in exhibit A without authorization. They have also occupied for the same length of time the hangar built by the city on the property. Moderate rents would be 5 cents per square foot per year for the land and 30 cents per square foot per year for the hangar space.

Rental due for 366,078 square feet included in lease at 5 cents per square foot per year for 4½ years	$82,367.55
Rental due for 649,600 square feet land occupied without authorization at 5 cents per square foot per year for 1⅓ years from January 1944 to May 1945	43,306.67
Rental due for 28,740 square feet of hangar space at 30 cents per square foot per year, exclusive of ground rent, for 4½ years	38,799.00
Total	164,473.22

Rental due on land occupied by Laister-Kauffmann and Brayton

In addition to the area on the flying field appropriated by the Army, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation arranged for 372,800 square feet to be used on the field for parking planes; and in keeping with their methods of dealing with St. Louis at that time paid only a token rental for the space.

Laister-Kauffmann used this space from July to November 1944, and Brayton Flying Service, Inc., used it from June 1945 to March 1946. However, the land is fenced off, is still used to park planes, and to all intents and purposes is cut off from the airfield; and the city has had no use of the area from July 1944 to the present, a period of 2 years and 4 months.

Rental due on 372,800 square feet rented by RFC and used by Laister-Kauffmann and Brayton at 5 cents per square foot per year for 2⅓ years from July 1944 to Nov. 1, 1946	$43,493.33
Credit for cash received—$720 paid by Laister-Kauffmann and $139 paid by Brayton Flying Service	859.00
Balance due	42,634.33

Abandonment of runways

Because of the construction of the Curtiss-Wright buildings, the city was forced to abandon two runways which had been extensively used, and in which the city had a sizable investment. The loss of this investment entirely aside from the impairment in efficiency of the entire field has resulted in damages estimated at $200,000.

Physical damages to runways, etc.

Because of the use by aircraft originating at Curtiss-Wright, the Navy and other Federal sources, the city has sustained severe physical damage to its runways, taxiways, apron, and grass areas which have made necessary not only excessive maintenance, but also very heavy reconstruction of paved use cannot be allocated as to individual areas. Such damages occasioned by Federal source.

In addition the Navy, as well as the Army, has and still is, using large areas of city-owned land for the parking of aircraft. This use is without the consent of the city and without payment of any kind and results in loss of revenue, as well as actual out-of-pocket expense to the city. The physical damage alone is conservatively estimated at $250,000.

Landing fees due from the Army and Navy

Many branches of the Federal Government, particularly the Army and Navy, have used the Lambert-St. Louis Airport for a training field as well as other aviation purposes, and the military activities have, at times, been such that civilian flying at the field was suspended. Of the total 1,327,809 operations on the flying field by commercial and military aircraft during this period; 91.2 percent were made by military aircraft.

Commercial air lines which were compelled to adjust their schedules to the convenience of military have, of course, paid landing fees in accordance with their use of the field. The Federal agencies have paid nothing for their preemptive use of the field, and the city now calls upon the Federal Government to pay these fees on the same basis the commercial air lines have paid them.

During the years April 1, 1941, to November 1, 1946, the agencies of the Federal Government made 1,195,211 landings and take offs.

The commercial air lines pay on the basis of 66⅔ cents per operation. This equals $796,807.33 due from the Federal Government for the period from April 1, 1941, to November 1, 1946.

City's cost of operating wartime airport

During the 6 years, 1940-46, the city continued to operate the Lambert-St. Louis Airport at a cost of $250,000 per year. The city was, in effect, operating the airport for the benefit of Federal agencies, for these Federal agencies monopolized the airport to the extent of 90.1 percent of all operations.

Military aircraft had precedence over commercial airplanes, and the military did not hesitate to preempt the airfield to the exclusion of commercial aircraft for prolonged periods of time, running in length from a few hours to periods as long as 2 days, during which time all commercial aircraft were excluded from the use of the airfield.

In all fairness the Federal Government should reimburse the city for this $1,500,000 advanced by the city to operate what was literally a Federal airport, the operating expenses of which should have been paid by the Federal Government at that time.

Operation expense of Lambert-St. Louis Airport at $250,000 per year for 6 years, $1,500,000.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Office of Defense Plants,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The basis on which the Navy Department would be willing to declare the facilities furnished under lease agreement, Plancor 17A, between the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the McDonnell Aircraft Corp. for possible disposition by the War Assets Administration to the city of St. Louis has been requested.

As your Corporation is aware, the manufacturing plant constructed under the terms of the above-mentioned lease agreement is among those plants designated by the Air Coordinating Committee in its report to Congress dated October 29, 1945, to be set aside as stand-by facilities in the event of another national emergency. Furthermore this plant is presently occupied by a manufacturer engaged in the production of certain aircraft deemed essential to the Navy's aeronautical program. Consequently any surplus declaration that this Department might make must contain the following provisions:

(a) Any deed transferring title to the plant to any party or parties shall contain a stipulation that the property will be made available to the Navy Department within 120 days after receipt of a written notice by the Secretary of the Navy that the interests of national defense require the use of the plant by the Government;

(b) Any deed transferring title to other than a Government agency shall contain a stipulation that no structural alterations will be made without the consent of the Navy Department and that in the event of recapture by the Government the plant shall be restored to its original condition by the end of the hereinbefore-mentioned 120-day period, providing further that any restoration made necessary by an alteration approved by the Navy shall be made the subject of negotiations as to the possibility of reimbursement by the Government for such alterations;

(c) That the Navy Department will have the right to inspect any part of the property at reasonable times to see that it is adequately maintained and that the restrictions against alterations are complied with;

(d) That the Navy Department reserves for its use, or for the use of any party or parties it may designate, all of the floor space in the plant with the exception of 140,000 square feet of the high bay area and 227,500 square feet of other than high bay area located in that portion of the facilities furnished under Plancor 17A, which rest north of the railroad tracks, providing further that the apportionment of the accepted floor area will be made in such a manner as to prepare the manufacturing integrity of that area reserved for the Navy Department or its assignees.

It is to be further understood in the event of a surplus declaration made under the terms as hereinbefore outlined that your corporation shall forward to the War Assets Administration a letter reflecting this Department's desire that the final form of any proposed deed transferring title to the city of St. Louis, or any other party or parties, under such a declaration will be subject to the approval of the Navy Department in order that it may review the provisions relating to conditions in respect of national defense interests.

It is to be further understood that the proceeds from any disposition made under any such surplus declaration shall be credited in accordance with the applicable contracts between your corporation and the Navy Department.

LOAN AGENCY OF THE
RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
St. Louis, Mo., October 15, 1945.

Hon. ALOYS P. KAUFMANN,
Mayor, City of St. Louis,
St. Louis, Mo.

Re Curtiss-Wright Corp., Plancor 17.

DEAR SIR: The land lease dated the 1st day of November 1940, entered into between the city of St. Louis and Curtiss-Wright Corp., covering certain lands located at Lambert Airfield, Robertson, Mo., provides in paragraph II that the lessee shall not assign, transfer, convey, or sublease to anyone, without lessor's written consent, except that such lease may be assigned to the United States of America or any agency or corporation thereof, and if so assigned may be reassigned and subleased to Curtiss-Wright. Such assignment was effected by Curtiss-Wright to Defense Plant Corporation, which was dissolved pursuant to Public Law 109, Seventy-ninth Congress, approved on June 30, 1945, effective July 1, 1945, and all of its functions, powers duties, and authority, together with its documents, books of account, records, assets and liabilities of every kind and nature were transferred to Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be performed, exercised, and administered by Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the same manner and to the same extent and effect as if originally vested in Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Sponsorship of the captioned Plancor has been transferred from the Army Air Forces to the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, and this Corporation is terminating the agreement of lease with Curtiss-Wright Corp., and proposes to enter into a new lease with McDonnell Aircraft Corp. for the production of Navy planes under such sponsorship.

In view of the provisions of paragraph II of the above-mentioned land lease, it will be necessary that this Corporation obtain the consent of the city of St. Louis to the proposed sublease of the premises to McDonnell Aircraft Corp. for the purpose herein stated, unless this Corporation or some other governmental agency is to use the premises pursuant to the terms of the original landlease and assignment thereof by Curtiss-Wright Corp.

The terms of the proposed sublease between this Corporation and McDonnell Aircraft have been agreed upon and provide, among other things, for:

1. Rental at the rate of $1 per year;

2. A termination of such sublease at the end of a 5-year period ending September 30, 1950, subject to earlier termination as hereinafter set forth;

3. A continuation of the occupancy by Curtiss-Wright Corp. of building 4A not later than December 31, 1945, buildings K and engineering addition not later than March 31, 1946, and that the use of building 4A by McDonnell Aircraft Corp. after December 31, 1945, shall be contingent upon the prior written consent of RFC, together with the right of RFC to remove the operation of the proposed lease agreement building 4A and that portion of the area north of the Wabash Railway tracks not reasonably necessary to the use of the remaining facilities occupied by McDonnell Aircraft Corp.

4. A termination of the proposed lease at any time upon 10 days notice by either party when substantial use by the McDonnell Aircraft of the site, buildings, and machinery shall be no longer required to enable McDonnell Aircraft Corp. to furnish the Government with products required by the Government.

5. A termination by RFC by notice in writing, with approval of the Navy Department noted thereon, in addition to the abovementioned right of termination in the event—

(a) All or substantially all of McDonnell's contracts with the Government at any time outstanding for the manufacture or furnishing of McDonnell's product or other products shall be terminated or canceled prior to completion, or

(b) The Government shall request priority with respect to the manufacture or furnishing of any product and McDonnell shall fail or refuse to give priority, or

(c) A receiver or trustee is appointed for McDonnell or its property, or McDonnell makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or McDonnell becomes insolvent, or a petition is filed by or against McDonnell Aircraft pursuant to any of the provisions of the United States Bankruptcy Act, or

(d) For any violation of any of the terms, conditions, and covenants of the proposed lease, and a failure to cure such violation within 30 days after notice.

6. A covenant by McDonnell Aircraft Corp. that it will not, without the prior written consent of RFC and the Navy Department, use the site, buildings, and machinery for any purpose except for the manufacture and furnishing of McDonnell Aircraft's product and other products for the Government.

7. A covenant that McDonnell Aircraft will not, without prior written consent of RFC and the approval of the Navy Department, sell, assign, or pledge the proposed lease, or any of its rights or obligations thereunder, or sublease or permit the use by others of any of the property covered by said proposed lease except that McDonnell Aircraft may lease or lend to others for the performance by McDonnell of its contracts with the Government such items of machinery as it may designate in writing to RFC.

In view of the fact that this corporation desires to continue its use and occupancy of the premises in question by making the same available to McDonnell under the terms of a proposed sublease, as hereinabove stated, it is requested that the city of St. Louis consent to such proposed sublease, and that such consent be made in the form of a modification of the land lease of November 1, 1940.

Yours very truly,
SIDNEY B. MCCLANAHAN,
Acting Agency Counsel.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
CITY OF ST. LOUIS, MO.,

Mr. RAY W. RALEIGH,
c/o Gaylord Container Corp.,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR RAY: As promised, I am pleased to enclose copy of letter from Sidney B. McClanahan, Acting Agency Counsel of the Loan Agency of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, regarding terms of a lease between the Defense Plant Corporation, the city, and Curtiss-Wright Corp.

I shall also be happy to follow your suggestion that in future copies be made of all letters which Mayor Kaufmann wishes General Gaylord to have an opportunity to read, so that you may retain them in your files.

Very truly yours,
FRED HUME, Jr.,
Secretary to the Mayor.

EXHIBIT E

THE CITY OF ST. LOUIS,
Law Department,
July 24, 1946.

Hon. A. P. KAUFMANN,
Mayor, City of St. Louis.

DEAR MR. MAYOR: You have requested my opinion as to whether there has been a breach of the covenants of a certain lease entered into on the 1st day of November 1940 between the city of St. Louis, as lessor, and Curtiss-Wright Corp., as lessee, covering certain land at Lambert-Municipal Airport.

The term of the lease is 25 years, with the right of renewal, by lessee, for an additional 25 years.

Paragraph 11 of the lease is as follows:

"Lessee stipulates and agrees not to assign, transfer, convey, sublet, or otherwise dispose of this lease, or of its right, title, or interest therein, to any other person, company, or corporation without the lessor's previous consent in writing, except that lessor hereby consents that lessee may assign, transfer, convey, sublet, or otherwise dispose of this lease or its right, title, or interest therein, to the United States of America, or any agency or corporate instrumentality thereof (and if so assigned may be reassigned and/or subleased to this lessee) or to a corporation wholly owned by lessee. This lease shall bind and inure to the benefit of all successors of the parties hereto and to the assigns of lessee as hereinabove limited."

Pursuant to the provisions of said paragraph 11, the lease was assigned by Curtiss-Wright Corp. to Defense Plant Corporation, an instrumentality of the United States.

On July 1, 1945, Defense Plant Corporation was dissolved by act of Congress and all of its assets, presumably including this lease, were transferred to Reconstruction Finance Corporation, another instrumentality of the United States.

So far, in my opinion, the transfers of interest in the lease were authorized under the provisions of the above-mentioned paragraph eleventh.

It now appears, however, that Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made a transfer of interest in the lease to McDonnell Aircraft Corp. We have never been advised, so far as I know, of the exact nature of this transfer, except as may be indicated in the letter to you, under date of October 15, 1945, from Mr. Sidney B. McClanahan, Acting Agency Counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. McClanahan's letter states, in part:

"In view of the provisions of paragraph 11 of the above-mentioned land lease, it will be necessary that this Corporation obtain the consent of the city of St. Louis to the proposed sublease of the premises to McDonnell Aircraft Corp. for the purpose herein stated, unless this Corporation or some other governmental agency is to use the premises pursuant to the terms of the original land lease and assignment thereof by Curtiss-Wright Corp."

Mr. McClanahan concludes his letter as follows:

"In view of the fact that this Corporation desires to continue its use and occupancy of the premises in question by making the same available to McDonnell under the terms of a proposed sublease, as hereinabove stated, it is requested that the city of St. Louis consent to such proposed sublease, and that such consent be made in the form of a modification of the land lease of November 1, 1940."

As you know, the city has consistently refused to consent to any transfer of interest in the lease to McDonnell Aircraft Corp., by way of sublease or otherwise. Notwithstanding such refusal, it has been established and has been conceded that McDonnell Aircraft Corp. is in possession of, and is making use of, the demised premises.

There has, therefore, in my opinion, been a clear breach of the covenants of the lease.

Respectfully submitted.
GEORGE L. STEMMLER,
City Counselor.

BREAKING THE LOG JAM

Two reports have now been issued by special committees of the Municipal Airport Commission. Both reports are directly concerned with St. Louis' future as a national air center. Both propose specific courses of action. They deserve serious consideration, not only at the city hall but by every citizen who recognizes the importance of maintaining St. Louis' place in the air.

The report made public last week by the special committee named to investigate the causes of delay in the city's postwar aviation expansion program points the way to action which is essential in order to eliminate interdepartment conflicts and divided responsibility. The committee recommends that an airport agency be established to centralize authority and responsibility for the administration of municipal airports. Such an agency the committee urges, should be responsible to the people, should be tied into the city government by mayoralty appointment and financial accountability and should be authorized to hire the business and technical personnel necessary to manage the airports.

This step is consistent both with efficient government administration and the practices of private enterprise. Under the present setup the committee points out that aviation must compete for attention with all the other city affairs in each department and with each official concerned. Aviation was forced to wait its turn, with the result that vexatious delays have occurred and mistakes have been made.

A city airport authority with straight-line responsibility should help end the delays and confusion in St. Louis Airport program. It should also assure efficient and economical administration of the program in the future. The committee urges that the airport authority be created as quickly as possible and suggests that a Government research institute be asked to cooperate in working out the steps necessary to insure the legal competency of the authority. The city looks to Mayor Kaufmann to act promptly on this proposal.

The second report, made public yesterday by the special committee headed by Clifford W. Gaylord, vice chairman of the commission, suggests that it is time for a showdown with the Federal agencies which are usurping Lambert-St. Louis Field and hampering its development. The 143-page report presents a carefully documented indictment of the Federal practices which are retarding the expansion of Lambert Field and interfering with control of municipally owned facilities. It includes a bill of $6,514,210 for uncompensated services and damages.

Included in the fighting indictment are charges that:

The Navy by exercising a high priority over the $11,000,000 former Curtiss-Wright plant has deprived the city of facilities needed for servicing large planes. Such facilities are essential if St. Louis is to expand as a commercial air center

The Navy also usurps the major portion of the south side of the field with its naval training station and has taken over additional space for parking facilities. The Navy has not indicated any intention of abandoning its 21-acre site and the only concession it has made to the city is to agree that pilots will not be trained at the field.

The Army, for a rental of $1 a year, continues to occupy 8.4 acres of land at the field, with a city-owned hangar, and has encroached upon the field for 649,000 additional square feet of space.

It is amazing to discover that when the city sought to regain control of the field after the war its representatives were, in their own words, "given the Washington run-around." It is even more disturbing to contemplate the obvious results of the continuation of such high-handed tactics.

Obviously the city cannot proceed with its plans for the expansion of Lambert Field until St. Louis can be assured of full control of the field's facilities, and until the city knows what will be the final disposition of the Curtiss-Wright buildings, the naval training station, and the Army's quarters. It would be foolish for the city to construct new hangars for servicing planes if the Curtiss-Wright building with its high bay areas is to be made available It would be idle to plan for an air cargo depot until the city knows whether the other facilities will be vacated.

Other cities in this country have been the beneficiaries of large and expensive airports built by the Government during the war and turned over to those municipalities. St. Louis, on the other hand, is not only deprived of such Federal donations, but is now being penalized for its patriotism.

This city has been patient—perhaps too patient. It has vainly sought to settle the controversial matters privately with the Federal Government. This policy has failed. Now it is time for St. Louis to fight for its rights.

It is not a partisan fight, and there is no need that it become a partisan issue. To avoid any charge of partisanship, Mayor Kaufmann should name as the city's representatives in securing the return of Lambert Field to St. Louis and the payment of just Federal damages men of both political parties, representing neither the Democratic nor Republican Parties, but the people of St. Louis, who demand justice in this matter. To obviate any suggestion that a Republican city administration is "cracking down" on a Democratic administration, it might even be good policy to have the redress committee headed by a well-known Democrat.

[From St. Louis Star-Times of January 7, 1947]

WHOSE AIRPORT IS IT?

The news columns of today's paper summarize in considerable detail the report of a special committee of the municipal airport commission on the crisis created at Lambert Field by the refusal of Federal agencies to release land and other facilities loaned or leased for the war emergency.

Reading the report, one cannot escape the conclusion that the Army and Navy, the War Assets Administration, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have assumed a dog-in-the-manger attitude which seriously interferes with development and use of the city s only major landing field. The appeals to patriotism to which Government spokesmen have resorted in defense of their desire to continue to dominate the field are out of date. It was patriotic of the city to make the airport available in wartime, but St. Louis is interested now in maximum use of the field for civil aviation and it cannot turn, as the Army and Navy can, to other sites. Lambert Field is going to be the only airport available to the city for several years and, goodness knows, it is none too big for commercial needs even if all Federal establishments and controls are removed.

The committee's criticism is based on months of futile negotiations with Federal agencies for an equitable restoration of the facilities to which St. Louis seems entitled. On the city's side is the fact that elsewhere the armed services have been willing to give municipalities millions of dollars' worth of airport improvements without argument.

If the generals and the admirals and the RFC directors will not listen to reason, the matter should be carried to the President himself. St. Louis deserves more than a slap in the face in return for more than $6,000,000 in out-of-pocket expense to provide aviation facilities in time of war.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of January 8, 1947]

USURPATION AT THE AIRPORT

The Federal Government should get off Lambert-St. Louis Field. The continued encroachment of Federal agencies has exhausted the city's patience, as the report of a committee of the airport commission shows. St. Louisans hope there can be a constructive settlement with Washington, but in any case the squeeze play must end. The airport is ours.

This is an astonishing story from the investigating committee. In some cities where the Federal Government was forced to build military airports it later made virtual gifts of them to the municipalities. In St. Louis, the city granted the Government rights to Lambert Field because of the war emergency, but now the Government wants to hold on. Has the city's patriotism backfired?

From 1940 to 1942 the city issued three leases of airport land to the Government. One was for construction of the Curtiss-Wright plant for the Army Another was for a naval training station. The third was for an Army air transport command depot. Charges for these leases were nominal—in the last case only $1 a year.

Now what? Now the Army engineers are said to want to peddle their rights to the depot to some other agency. The Navy is hanging on to its training station, although the city charges that naval flights are a hazard to our growing commercial operations. As for the Curtiss-Wright plant, there has been dickering and buck passing and legalistic mumbo-jumbo but the Government still holds on.

When the Army was through with that plant, the city hoped to take it over. It was on city ground; other cities had been given similar Federal projects. Moreover, the city charges that Federal use of Lambert Field has run up $6,514,210 in damages. Regardless of that figure, there has been no payment.

Instead, the Navy stepped in when the Army departed. It turned the plant over to McDonnell Aircraft Corp. for a dollar a year. So the city got busy. What the city wanted was the plant, or, at least, use of the highway area for sheltering and servicing big airline planes. This was necessary, the city felt, to permit air lines to begin major flights here, instead of regarding St. Louis as just a stopover.

The report describes months of a round-robin with Washington. The Navy thought it might declare the Curtiss-Wright property surplus, but the War Assets Administration rejected the Navy's terms. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, acting for the Navy, made offers of rental or lease, reversing itself each time. One WAA official lectured Mayor Kaufmann on patriotism. An RFC officer attacked the city's land lease because it gave the city the right to veto occupants of the plant. It was "bad law," he said, even though the Government had signed it. In short, it's all a fine bureaucratic mess.

Where will the city go from here? Possibly to court, possibly to further negotiations, possibly to top authority in Washington. Wherever it goes, the city administration has the support of the people, and should have the strong backing of its Members of Congress.

Yet the public will also hope for a rational agreement. The St. Louis area wishes to be hospitable to the military aviation services within reason. If Washington wants to establish its own air bases here it may do so, and it has the money to do so, without hobbling our only major airport.

As for the McDonnell Aircraft Corp., it is caught in the middle. The city accuses the Navy of rewarding McDonnell at the city's expense. Since McDonnell is engaged in work which is a public service, some means should be found for permitting the company to continue, but not at the city's expense.

Meanwhile the dispute with Washington must not interfere with the city's airport planning. The dispute does not mean the "ruination" of our plans, as the committee suggests. It is a hindrance, but one of the main obstacles to expanding Lambert Field and developing new airports is administrative delay. The investigating committee virtually said so itself, in its first report last week. There should be no delay in carrying out the committee's proposal to give the city a responsible, undivided aviation authority.

But St. Louis has problems enough without those foisted upon us by assorted agencies in Washington. They have repaid hospitality with usurpation. That must end.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 10, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord Jesus, Thou hast promised to give us the Holy Spirit if we are willing to open our hearts and let Him in. Make us willing now that things of eternal significance may begin to happen here. We know deep down in our hearts that without Thy guidance we can do nothing, but with Thee we can do all things. Let us not be frightened by the problems that confront us, but rather give Thee thanks that Thou hast matched us with this hour. May we resolve, God helping us, to be part of the answer, and not part of the problem.

For Jesus' sake. Amen.

By Mr. LODGE (for himself and Mr. SALTONSTALL):

A resolution adopted by the Cardinal O'Connell Council, No. 2919, Knights of Columbus, assembled in regular meeting at the American Legion Hall, Chestnut Hill, Mass., relating to the trial and conviction of the Most Reverend Archbishop of Zagreb, Yugoslavia, Aloysius Stepinac; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

USE OF GRAIN IN MAKING WHISKY AND DISTILLED SPIRITS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I received from Mrs. A. F. Goad, corresponding secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Augusta, Kans., a memorial against the increased use of grain for making whisky and distilled spirits. I ask unanimous consent to have this memorial from the women of Kansas printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUSTA, KANS., November 19, 1946.

Mr. CLINTON ANDERSON,
Secretary of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Associated Press of October 21 carried this news item from Washington:

"The Agriculture Department announced tonight that the Nation's distilling industry will be granted about 16 percent more grain for making whisky and distilled spirits in October and subsequent months until further notice. It also granted brewers about 6 percent more grain."

This note is sent to you to raise vigorous protest against the above action.

In a world that is hungry, cold, and needy, the above action by a civilized Nation (even called a Christian Nation), is, to say the least, wasteful and disgraceful.

And, not only that, but it means ruined manhood and womanhood in our own Nation.

And sufficient grain is not available for stock feed and is at a prohibitive price.

As women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in session this afternoon we hereby register our opposition to this action and request that it be rescinded.

Enclosed you will find a copy of the action taken in the spring by a group of people, all of them living in Augusta or its near vicinity except two—a total of 205 people.

Yours truly,

Mrs. D. A. Zahn, President; Mrs. George Patton; Mrs. William A. Johnson; Mrs. Minnie Ralston; Mrs. William Olson; Mrs. George Snider; Mrs. F. S. Anderson; Mrs. John Luding; Mrs. C. C. Hooper; Mrs. C. E. Hanes; Mrs. A. Auer; Mrs. M. J. Cash; Mrs. C. B. Robb; Mrs. N. D. Smith; Mrs. Roy Skeels; Mrs. A. Holladay, Vice President; Mrs. A. F. Goad, Corresponding Secretary.

TAX REDUCTION—EDITORIAL BY C. F. BYRNS

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, one of the most important issues that will come before this Congress is that of tax reduction. There appeared in the Fort Smith (Ark.) Southwest American on January 6 an editorial by the editor, C. F. Byrns, which is a very able discussion of this problem. Mr. Byrns' logic and reasoning are so sound that the editorial will commend itself to the consideration of the Members of this body, and I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFF THE RECORD

(By C. F. Byrns)

The No. 1 bill of the Republican majority in the House of Congress proposes to cut income taxes 20 percent on 1947 incomes.

The No. 1 job of the party now in power is to manage the financial affairs of the Government so that there will be enough money to provide an adequate defense, carry on the essential operations of Government, and cut down the national debt.

A cut in income taxes is popular. I'd love it, personally. So would you. But my personal feeling about my own tax bill is not the final consideration. I'd love it, too, if I had no income tax to pay—nor any other kind. But it would be disastrous for the country, and finally disastrous for me. The decision on a tax cut or no tax cut must be pitched on a broader plane than the individual's selfish desire to save some of his tax bill.

Right now, the people of this country have more cash income than they ever had before. Maybe not every one of them, but all of them together. The total national income for 1946 is officially reported at about 164 billions, slightly higher than in 1945. If we aren't going to make a sizable dent in the national debt now, we never will. If we aren't going to provide now for essential protection and development of our natural resources, with such things as flood control, navigation, and other programs of that sort, we never will.

If the Republicans can trim some of the waste out of Government expenses and get the budget down to a point where a tax cut is intelligent, then I'm all for it. But I'm not for it at the expense of the national defense, nor the orderly development of internal improvements, nor the essential services of government nor the reductions we should be making in these good times in the national debt.

At this moment, high taxes loom up as an important public complaint. But at this moment, we are better able to pay high taxes than we have ever been before. It is possible, although by no means certain, that we shall not see again in our lifetime a national income as large as it is now.

It seems to me a sound principle of taxation to get the money when the getting is easy and reduce the demands on the taxpayer when he has less to spend. Usually, we have operated in the other direction. When income is high and tax revenues are rising—as they have been in Arkansas and in the entire Nation in the past few years—people look at the big figures and cry out for tax reductions. At least they resist tax rises on the ground that they are not needed. When the income drops and tax revenues drop with it, cuts in taxes are resisted because the Government agencies need the money to carry on essential services, including the extra expenses caused by depression. In such circumstances Government has gone into debt.

The National Government has been on a deficit basis since the early thirties. The debt has mounted to a figure impossible for most of us to grasp—somewhere around $275,000,000,000. (What is a few billions, more or less?) There is a chance now to make some reduction in that debt. There is a great popular cheer awaiting anybody who will cut taxes. The chances are the tax cut will win. But I keep wondering if it really makes sense.

REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—ADDITIONAL REPORT ON FEDERAL PERSONNEL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, during the month of November 1946 Federal employment, both inside and outside the United States, dropped 111,006 from the October total of 2,441,473 to the November total of 2,330,467. Inside the United States employment dropped 101,475 from the October total of 2,125,469 to the November total of 2,023,994. Decreases in the War and Navy Departments totaled 40,325. Outside the United States employment dropped 9,531 from the October total of 316,004 to the November total of 306,473.

Largest increases occurred in the Veterans' Administration, which added 8,364 employees, to bring their total to 221,760, and the War Assets Administration, which added 1,599, to bring their total to 58,922. Largest decreases were in the War Department, which dropped 46,651; the Post Office Department, which dropped 37,345; the Labor Department, which, by following the direction of the Congress to return the United States Employment Service to the States, dropped 22,720; the Department of Agriculture, which dropped 6,516; the Navy Department, which dropped 3,456; the Office of Price Administration, which dropped 2,706; the Interior Department, which dropped 1,312; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which dropped 1,033.

The relief which the sorely pressed taxpayer might feel in reading such figures must be mitigated somewhat by two considerations which should be borne in mind. The first of these is that a portion of this decrease is found among seasonal and temporary employees, who quite possibly may be hired again at a later date. The second is that over-all employment, with the exception of the War and Navy Departments, is still considerably greater than it was on VJ-day. On August 31, 1945, Federal employment, excluding War and Navy but including that of 19 war agencies, stood at 1,117,456. On November 30, 1946, this same group of establishments totaled 1,296,397. In other words, the reductions which are now taking place are not reductions below our war-peak total; rather, they are merely decreases which still leave the Federal Government, excluding the War and Navy Departments, with 178,941 more employees than it needed to beat Germany and Japan.

I have heard the argument that certain agencies, forced to curtail their normal peacetime activities because of the war, now need additional employees to handle the backlog of work, and also that the war and its aftermath have given the agencies additional responsibilities requiring more employees. Accepting this, let us examine Federal employment as of December 1939. At that time there were 706,700 Federal employees within the United States, not including those in the War Department and Navy Department. As of November 30, 1946, there were 1,240,378 such employees within the United States and 56,019 overseas. Also, in December 1939 there were 222,136 civilian employees in the War and Navy Departments, while as of November 1946, there are 783,616 civilians in the War and Navy Departments, nor does this include 250,454 civilian War and Navy Department employees overseas. Certainly these figures offer convincing proof that our Government is still needlessly overmanned; that our country is still needlessly over-governed; that our taxpayers are still needlessly over burdened.

The new Congress, regardless of political affiliation, must not shirk the duty which the departments and agencies, by their failure to reduce to peacetime requirements, have forced upon it. At present the annual pay roll of the executive branch of the Government approximates $6,250,000,000. This is $1,500,000,000 more than the entire Government spent for all purposes in 1933. The executive branch now employs more people than all the State, city, and county governments of the entire 48 States. With the exception of school teachers this includes, beside the regular State and municipal authorities, all the policemen, firemen, and public-service employees of the entire Nation. I call upon the Congress to correct this evil. If we are ever to balance the budget, to reduce the national debt, we must do it now. And we cannot do it with 2,330,000 Federal employees.

I ask unanimous consent that an additional report of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures relating to Federal personnel be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL PERSONNEL IN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH NOVEMBER 1946, AND A COMPARISON WITH OCTOBER 1946

(All figures compiled from reports signed by the heads of Federal establishments or their authorized representatives)

According to monthly personnel reports submitted to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, Federal personnel within the continental United States during November decreased 101,475 from a total of 2,125,469 in October to 2,023,994 in November. Excluding the War and Navy Departments, personnel decreased 61,150 from the October total of 1,301,528 to the November total of 1,240,378. The War Department within the United States decreased 37,017 from the October total of 492,162 to the November total of 455,145. The Navy Department inside the United States decreased 3,308 from the October figure of 331,779 to the November figure of 328,471. (See table I.)

Outside the continental United States, Federal personnel decreased 9,531 from the October total of 316,004 to the November total of 306,473. The majority of these employees are industrial workers. (See tables II and IV.) Exclusive of the War and Navy Departments, there was an increase of 251 from the October figure of 55,768 to the November figure of 56,019.

The consolidated table presenting data with respect to personnel inside and outside continental United States shows a total decrease of 111,006 from the October total of 2,441,473 to the November total of 2,330,467. Excluding War and Navy Departments reductions of 50,107, there was a decrease of 60,899 employees in the executive branch of the Federal Government from the October figure of 1,357,296 to the November figure of 1,296,397. (See table III.)

Industrial employment during the month of November decreased 30,852 from the October total of 690,609 to the November total of 659,757. The War Department decreased 9,872 outside continental United States and decreased 18,111 inside the United States in the industrial group, making a total reduction of 27,983 employees. The Navy Department showed a decrease of 2,786 industrial employees. The term "industrial employees" as used by the committee refers to unskilled, semiskilled, skilled, and supervisory employees paid by the Federal Government, who are working on construction projects such as airfields and roads and in shipyards and arsenals. It does not include regular maintenance and custodial employees. (See table IV.)
